CCM moves Tues. mass off-campus

By CINDY ELMORE

The Catholic Campus Ministry's use of the Warren University Union has been decreased by the Student Activities Office because of fears about the separation of church and state doctrine, student activities coordinator Chris Sachs said.

"Recognized campus groups have a right to use the facilities, but we did not want to get into the position that someone says they (CCM) are using the building too much," he said. "State property is not supposed to be used for religious purposes."

According to Sachs, CCM events comprised 22 percent of all WUU room reservations by student organizations during the month of September. This figure did not include university commission, committee, or faculty meetings, or programs scheduled by the Career Planning and Placement Office in the union. Also not included were student groups that have permanent facilities in the WUU, such as the University Program Board, Student Government Association, Bluestone, and others.

THEREFORE, as a decreasing measure, CCM's Tuesday night mass was moved to Emmaus House, an off-campus home for CCM priest Father Bill LaFratta and seven social ministers.

JMU offers advice, but not the device

Students seek birth control services at off-campus facilities

By CINDY ELMORE

James Madison University is the only major educational institution in Virginia that does not offer birth control services or prescriptions.

Old Dominion University, the University of Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth University, the College of William and Mary and, since May 1979, Virginia Tech, all offer birth control prescriptions, and several have complete gynecological services.

Old Dominion and the University of Virginia have their own gynecology clinics, Virginia Commonwealth University has a part-time gynecology clinic associated with the Medical College of Virginia, and Virginia Tech has its own gynecologist, according to a June 3, 1979, article in the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

A policy decision was made several years ago not to dispense contraceptives at JMU's Health Center, said Jeanne Dyer, Health Center coordinator of student relations. Doctors then agreed that the student body should not have to pay for the services of a few, or even of half the students. Another factor was doctors' lack of time to provide complete contraceptive services, she added, explaining that other college health centers prescribing or dispensing contraceptives, or having full gynecological services, usually are associated with medical schools.

PRESCRIPTIONS are necessary to obtain birth control pills, inter-uterine devices (IUDs), and diaphragms.

JMU's Health Center does provide pregnancy testing.

During the 1977 spring semester, the Health Center did provide a $5 diaphragm—fitting service for women, but it was dropped after a brief period.

"It was published in The Breeze, but we had very little call for the service. Doctors agreed to drop it," Dyer said.

According to the 1978 Statistical Abstract of the United States, the most popular birth control method for all ages is the Pill, followed by sterilization (both male and female), the condom, and the IUD.

Five different contraceptives can be obtained at minimal cost to students from the Harrisonburg Health Department, said Bobbie Horne, Health Department nurse in charge of Family Services.

"We don't push birth control, but we're here if a girl needs us," she added. "Depending upon the income, there could be a charge (for contraceptives). But with most students, there isn't."

BIRTH CONTROL pills, IUDs, diaphragms, foams, and vaginal suppositories are available without requirements or restrictions through the Health Department's Family Planning Clinic. Both are located at 227 East Elizabeth Street in Harrisonburg.

According to a recent survey funded by Zero Population Growth, almost three-fourths of Virginia's college population are sexually active. The survey also reports that college-aged Virginians have a higher abortion and venereal disease rate than any other age group in the state.

"People who are sexually active should think before," Dyer said. "Face it, sexual

Summer school to undergo extensive changes

Converting classes to longer time blocks and fewer days a week

By CINDY ELMORE

A major overhaul of the 1980 James Madison University Summer School schedule has been adopted and will convert classes to longer time blocks and fewer days a week than the 1979 summer schedule.

"All classes will meet the same total number of hours as before, but two or three or four days a week, instead of five," said Dr. Elizabeth Finlayson, dean of the summer school.

No changes were made in the calendar dates for summer sessions except for the addition of a six-week term for graduate level courses. The May session class schedule was not changed.

The changes were made primarily to cut gas consumption for summer school commuter students. Last summer, 1,800 of 2,000 students enrolled in summer school here were commuters. Many traveled to JMU from as far away as Winchester, New Market, Lexington and parts of West Virginia, Finlayson said.

"THE CHANGE will cut down on driving time," she added. "We have had many objections over the years from students driving all the way here for a one hour class. As long as they're driving to Harrisonburg, they might as well stay three hours as one hour."

All classes scheduled for the two four-week summer blocks (June 16-July 11 and July 15-Aug. 8) will meet Monday through Thursday for two hours and 20 minutes each day. Classes scheduled for the eight-week summer block (June 16-Aug. 8) also will meet for two hours and 20 minutes, but only on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

"If not for the gas situation, we might not have taken this step. But we think we may have had problems with enrollment from students traveling those distances. Gas costs money. We had to make a dramatic change—nothing else would have helped."

The changes in class schedules will cut gasoline consumption by 20 percent in the four-week terms, and by 60 percent in the eight-week term, she added.

The schedule alterations were initiated by Finlayson, who requested student and faculty input through three hearings last spring. The hearings and their dates were announced in The Breeze, but no students attended, she said.

IN ADDITION to gas savings, a correlated hour schedule is a second advantage to the new plan, Finlayson said.

Last summer, times for four-week courses conflicted with times for eight-week courses, she added. Next summer, all courses will meet and end at the same time so that a student can be enrolled in more than one session simultaneously.

The six-week graduate school summer session was added primarily for the advantage of local teachers, she said, adding, "their own school system overlapped with our eight-week program. We have never allowed 600-level classes in the four-week term."

Classes scheduled for the six-week session (June 30-Aug. 8) will meet for two hours and 20 minutes on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Predicted gas consumption savings are 40 percent.

All schedule alterations will require changes in teaching methods to accommodate the longer hours, Finlayson said. "They can't lecture for two and a half hours. They'll have to think of something else to do."

"There is a risk factor; we don't know how this will work. But we won't know until we try."

On-campus crime rate down

By DONNA SIZEMORE

The crime rate for the James Madison University campus has decreased.

Statistics for this year's crime rate have not been tabulated yet, but in comparison with criminal incidents reported at this time last year, this year's reports reveal less crime, according to Sergeant H.W. Lam of the security office here.

In 1978, on a campus-wide basis, JMU had four incidents of disorderly conduct, 33 drunk-in-public charges, 106 occurrences of vandalism and 200 incidents of larceny, Lam said. However, he stressed that these figures include only reported crimes.

In comparison with crime on other campuses, Lam said, "ours is considerably lower than most." JMU has "very little" crime, he continued.

Lam cited several reasons for the low crime rate here. According to Lam, the rate has "a lot to do with the personality of the student body and physical layout of the campus."

MOST OF the crime that does occur on campus is petty such as stealing, Lam said, adding that JMU had no major crimes last year.

One of the major crimes that does continue to concern students is theft in residence halls.

According to Lin Rose, associate director of residence halls at JMU, students here are fortunate.

"I would say, in talking with colleagues at other institutions, that the problem we have with theft is minimal," Rose said.

"Theft we have here generally takes place because a resident leaves his or her door unlocked," Rose continued.

According to Rose a large number of dorm thefts can be prevented. "The solution to 90 percent of the problem is for people to keep their doors locked," he added.

HOWEVER, in spite of prompting to do so, many residents still leave their doors unlocked. "People don't come to grips with it until they experience problems," Rose said.

Rose also said that many cases of dorm theft go unreported.

Historical problem of Adolph Hitler 'great'

Visiting scholar delves into personality of Germany's 'evil genius'

By DAN McNIEL

"There is not much doubt that the two mountain ranges that dominated the landscape of this century are the two world wars and the origins of the second world war is easily identifiable with one man—Adolph Hitler," said a visiting scholar here Thursday.

Chesnut Hill College Historian John Lukacs possessed a thorough knowledge of his subject, "The Historical Importance of Adolph Hitler" reviewing his association with the World War II period through anecdotes and historical facts.

"The historical problem of Hitler remains very great in spite of the fact that many biographies have been written about him," Lukacs said.

HITLER WAS an effective artist as well as an influential political leader. According to Lukacs, over 100 of Hitler's watercolors (of considerable value today) are owned by a man in Scotland. Lukacs described the works as "much better than Roosevelt's."

Hitler's greatest skill was at influencing people, Lukacs said.

The discovery of this talent is presumed to be early in Hitler's career when he began accumulating ideas on German supremacy in the formative years spent in Vienna and Munich.

"In Munich, which was similar to Greenwich Village, Hitler first realized his gift as a speaker after the failure of the Bolshevik Revolution. We are not quite sure if his ideas for the war crystallized in Munich or Vienna," Lukacs said.

Hitler's service in the first World War is deemed to have contributed greatly to his later political beliefs.

"HE WAS A completely different person before the war and a very quiet person in the trenches of the first World War," Lukacs said. Hitler was a victim of the gassing used as a military defensive in that war.

Hitler soon became confident in his speech but was still classified by Lukacs as a "strange combination. He was talkative and close-mouthed at the same time."

Lukacs also said that, "Some fragmentary evidence exists that what Hitler sometimes thought was sometimes different from what he said."

By November 1941, Lukacs believed Hitler knew the war was lost, but Hitler never gave the slightest indication of his feelings to even his closest aides and, "rallied them with the proper dedication," Lukacs said.

Hitler's "rallying" often led to lengthy harangues that lasted into the wee hours of the morning, Lukacs said adding that Hitler "was not a morning person, he slept until at least 11 every morning and stayed up till late at night."

LUKACS NOTED that Hitler was "very loyal to his people. He had a kind of old world charm and his secretaries adored him."

Hitler was fond of England, and cultivated a love-hate relationship with Great Britain, Lukacs said. "At the end of the war, Hitler said he should have been more generous towards England at Dunkirk," Lukacs said.

Lukacs believed that the two days wait at Dunkirk was Hitler's decision, a personal one rather than a military move. He said Hitler misinterpreted the evacuation at Dunkirk and thought the "48-hour hesitation meant England was quitting the war."

England's Prime Minister Winston Churchill was Hitler's nemesis and the "man who blocked Hitler's chances to win the war. Hitler had a sixth sense to recognize personal weaknesses, but Churchill was one person he could not understand. Churchill outsmarted Hitler in the summer of 1940 by making Hitler believe that Britain was stronger than she really was," Lukacs said.

LUKACS LABELED Hitler an "evil genius" and a

"racist" but said he was not a "madman."

"If Hitler had been truly mad, we would not have attributed any responsibility of his evils to him. The laws of mathematics do not apply to human beings and Hitler was not just 50 percent bad," Lukacs said.

One of the problems in studying Hitler is the lack of documents signed and ordered by Hitler. "There is no document that connects Hitler with his most monstrous decision—the extermination of Jews. He actually dictated very few letters and liked to conduct business orally," Lukacs said.

Lukacs suggested one advantage to the study of Hitler—"It provides many lecture and book-of-the-month club offers."

JMU has plenty of fuel for winter weather

By LOUIS EACHO

With the unseasonably early snowfall of Oct. 10 still fresh in everyone's memory it may come as a relief to know that James Madison University will have an ample supply of energy this winter.

"All of our tanks are filled completely right now, so it would take quite a disaster, such as the 1973 Arab Oil Embargo, to cause any problems whatsoever," Jim Aukland, JMU's energy conservation engineer said. Even though fuel oil is the only energy source presently used to heat JMU's buildings, "we also have a 30 day supply of coal in case of an emergency," Aukland said.

Keeping all of the buildings on the campus heated may be no problem, but paying for the huge increases in heating oil will double JMU's utility bills, Aukland said.

"LAST YEAR fuel oil cost JMU over $500,000 and it's safe to say that these costs have already risen over 75 percent since then," Aukland said.

"Looking at it another way: our utility bills here were over $124,000 at the end of September and by January we may be paying as much as $250,000 a month," he said. "I really don't think students realize how high the cost of heating this school is," he said.

All thermostats in the buildings on the front campus, which are heated by a central power plant, and the back campus, which are heated by boilers in each individual building, are now in the process of being set at the federal temperature guidelines for this winter, Aukland said.

All academic buildings will be set at 65 degrees, while all of the dormitories will be set at 68 degrees, he said.

ALTHOUGH oil is the only energy source now used on campus, coal has been used in previous years and the prospect of burning gas is being looked into, according to Aukland.

"The state is in the process now of approving funds to modify our boilers at the power plant to burn gas as well as oil," Aukland said.

Two coal boilers in the power plant could be used if needed, "but they are quite old and would take a lot of modification to meet present pollution-control standards," he said.

"Still, the boilers were used during the 1973 Arab Oil Embargo when heating oil was scarce and the university was given permission to use coal reserves," Aukland said.

JMU purchases all of its heating oil from local companies contracted by the state, so Harrisonburg and the surrounding areas should have no problems with obtaining heating oil either, Aukland said.

Required grade point average below national college mean

By KEVIN MILLER

The minimum grade point average (GPA) requirement for application to Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges may be raised from 2.75 to 3.0 next year, according to the assistant dean of students.

The present James Madison University requirement of a 2.75 GPA is well below the national college mean GPA of 2.99. Therefore, a lot of students apply to the Who's Who program don't have a good chance of being accepted, said Dr. Al Menard, addressing the Commission on Student Services Thursday. Menard was speaking for the Who's Who selection committee.

Some 155 students applied to Who's Who in 1978, 20 of which had GPA's in the 2.75-2.99 range. None were accepted. Of the 48 students who were accepted, 42 had GPA's over 3.25, said Menard.

Raising the minimum GPA requirement will be discussed at the next meeting of the commission on Thursday, Nov. 1.

There are 48 JMU students selected for the 1979 list of Who's Who. Their names have been sent to Who's Who in Alabama and will be announced here in late November, Menard said.

IN OTHER, commission business, a constitution for the Psychology Club was unanimously approved with a few revisions suggested by Commission representatives.

The new club will be open to any person interested in Psychology. It was formed because "students felt the need for a club in the Psychology department that didn't have GPA requirements," said the club's president, Joanne Steves.

Psi Chi, the honorary club of the Psychology Department requires a minimum overall GPA of 3.00, and 3.25 in the Psychology department.

The commission, comprised of 10 faculty and administrators, and seven students with legislative experience reviewed the constitution submitted by Steves and the club's faculty adviser, Dr. Richard West.

COMMISSION representatives unanimously approved the official formation of the club and reviewed each section of the constitution. They made suggestions and revisions at points that were unclear or possibly harmful to the smooth operation of the club.

"We try to spot weaknesses in the constitution and revise it so the new organization will run more effectively," said Chairman Dr. William Hall. The commission members have experience with various groups and organizations so their suggestions are meant to help, said Hall, vice president of student affairs.

The revised constitution will be sent to JMU President Ronald Carrier. If he approves it, the constitution will become legal, said Hall.

The constitution of Kappa Kappa Pi, a honorary band club, was scheduled to be reviewed. However, representatives of the club did not attend the meeting.

If the club doesn't have an acceptable excuse for their absence, review of their constitution will be postponed until a free date on the commission's agenda, said Hall.

Asimov received less money as guest speaker for JMU

By TERESA CAVINESS
Isaac Asimov, guest speaker on Oct. 4 during James Madison University's Sixth Annual Arts and Sciences Symposium, received a significantly reduced fee from what he often times receives for his appearances.

According to a recent
"Parade" magazine article,
Asimov usually receives
$10,000 for his appearances.

For Asimov's second appearance at JMU, Asimov received $3,000, the same fee paid to him two years ago,
said Dr. Michael Wartell, dean of the College of Letters and Sciences. Asimov speaks all around the country about 200 times each year. Most of his speeches deal with the same topic he covered here

Oct. 4, "The Future of Civilization."

The article in "Parade" listed Asimov as the fifth highest paid speaker in the country, tied with Ralph Nader and Lowell Thomas.
Those receiving more than Asimov are Bob Hope who receives $30,000, Henry Kissinger, $27,000; Gerald
Ford, $17,000; and Gen.
Alexander Haig, $15,000.

However, Asimov received
$10,000 only once, Wartell said. That appearance was made in California, and because of Asimov's fear of flying, he travelled by train.

The trip, counting travel and speech time, took about a week, Wartell said, adding that the time spent in travelling was worth the $10,000 charged by Asimov.

Honor code and

Homecoming weekend

One year ago...

(The Breeze, Friday, October 6, 1978)

The Student Government Association, Tuesday, supported the proposal of having the honor code appear on all tests given at James Madison University.

The purpose of this proposal, recommended by the university honor society, Omicron Delta Kappa, and the Honor Council, is to make the honor code more visible and thus strengthen it.

The S.G.A. also went on record in support of teacher evaluations and hopes to have the program under way by December 1.

Evaluations will be conducted either in classrooms or in residence halls, depending on faculty reaction.

Today

(The Breeze, Tuesday, October 23, 1979)

Most teachers now provide some sort of reminder of the honor code for their tests; some write it on their tests, while others ask students to write it for themselves.

"I think having it written on tests helps strengthen the honor code, because more people are aware of it," said Honor Council President, Kevin Rack. "Before, a lot of people weren't aware of the honor code, but having it in front of them helps keep students conscious of its existence."

All James Madison University instructors have been requested to provide some sort of reminder of the honor code.

A departmental grievance procedure has been set up by each department head at the proposal of Dr. Thomas Stanton, vice-president of academic affairs.

Five years ago...

(The Breeze, Friday, October 25, 1974)

This year, to ease the growing pains of a rapidly expanding school, Madison offers its second annual Homecoming weekend.

The fall Homecoming, prompted by an alumni interest in sports, seeks to combine both the Parents Day and the Alumni Weekend in one activity-packed weekend. According to the "Madisonian," the alumni magazine, attendance is expected to exceed 4,000.

Homecoming 1974 features two main athletic events; a football game and a women's field hockey game against alumni, a Homecoming parade, a "Madisonian" concert, a college presentation of "King Lear," a dance at the Auto Auction, a rock concert in Godwin Hall featuring "America," a campus carnival, and the crowning of Ms. Madison.

Today

(The Breeze, Tuesday, October 23, 1979)

Now in its seventh year of existence, the James Madison Homecoming weekend no longer needs to be combined with a Parents Day to draw a crowd.

Attendance for this year's event is estimated to exceed 10,000 and will feature more activities and a large parade.

"You can see how it has grown," said Mr. Ben Hannock, director of alumni services. "Five years ago when Parents Day and Homecoming were combined we only had a little over 4,000 in attendance. Now it stands at over 10,000 for each."

Various activities scheduled for the Octoberfest '79 weekend include a soccer game, a dance in the WUU ballroom, a planetarium show, class reunions for the classes of '54, '59, '64, '69, and '74, a Homecoming parade, an intercollegiate horse show, the Homecoming football game against Randolph-Macon College, a Kenny Loggins concert, and the crowning of Ms. Madison.

Racial clash

BOSTON (AP)—Dozens of black and white students battled with their fists on the steps of racially troubled South Boston High School on Wednesday in the second racial clash in two days. Classes were canceled.

The fistfights involving up to 100 students followed a fracas inside the school Tuesday in which two students, three school aides and a teacher were hurt.

Such flareups have been frequent in the nation's oldest school system since it was integrated under federal court order five years ago.

Wednesday's fighting broke out when buses loaded with blacks arrived at the school about 8 a.m., police said. A pair of white pupils spotted one of the youngsters and shouted, "There he is," witnesses said.

Several whites attacked the youth, then a large group of white students waiting nearby swept into the crowd of blacks getting off the buses.

Estimates of the number of students involved in the fight range from 40 to more than 100. No one was arrested or seriously hurt. After police broke up the fracas, pupils inside the school were sent home.

Trend is changing?

CHESAPEAKE (AP)—The refusal of three Tidewater city councils to denounce the Ku Klux Klan shows "the sentiment is growing that the Klan is possibly right," says the groups' imperial wizard.

Bill Wilkinson said Wednesday the Chesapeake City Council's refusal Tuesday night to denounce the Klan means elected officials are losing their fear of the black vote.

"The trend in the past has been that the black vote can put everyone in and take everyone out. The trend is changing..."

"Frankly, six months or a year ago they would have condemned us," Wilkinson said from his home in Denham Springs, La.

"If it continues the way it is, we're going to be stronger, tremendously stronger, in another year. It's quite clear the sentiment is growing that the Klan is possibly right."

The Chesapeake council voted 6-4 to denounce the Klan, introduced by Dr. Hugo Owens, the city's vice mayor and one of two black councilmen.

Owens asked his fellow council members in a written statement to denounce the political resurgence of the Klan and "urge our citizens to work diligently toward closing rather than opening the breach between members of our body politic."

Tax gobblers

WASHINGTON (AP)—If you have the feeling that taxes are gobbling up more and more of your money, a new Census Bureau report shows vividly that you are right.

The 643-page "Compendium of Government Finances," released Sunday, discloses that between 1971 and 1977, taxes collected by all forms of government in this country increased by 59.4 percent.

And collections from income taxes—individual and corporate—climbed an enormous 70.6 percent.

The income tax collections were pushed upward primarily by the jump in Americans' personal income over the same period.

With income rising 78 percent, Americans paid taxes on more money and also edged into higher tax brackets, meaning they paid a larger share of their increased income.

Religious ruckus

ST. ALBANS, W.Va. (AP)—A man armed with a rifle and demanding to talk with the news media burst into a small church Sunday and held 30 worshippers hostage for nearly two hours before surrendering, authorities said.

The gunmen gave himself up after he was allowed to broadcast his statement over Charleston radio station WCHS. No injuries were reported in the ordeal.

The gunmen lived next to the church, said police, who identified him as Harold Mann of St. Albans.

Mann entered the St. Albans Church of Christ about 11 a.m., just after the preacher began a sermon and demanded to talk to reporters, said Bobby Murphy, a member of the church.

About 45 people were in the church when Mann entered the building. He allowed about 15 people, including some children, to leave and ordered the others to remain.

Several reporters and paramedics came to the scene and entered the church. Mann was then allowed to make a statement on-the-air from inside the church.

In his brief obscenity-filled statement, Mann said he was "fed up with the Federal government."

Mann accused the federal government of favoring "draft dodgers and deserters" in hiring people. He also accused the government of bringing "gooks" into the country, keeping Americans out of work.

He said he was determined to "save kids" from future wars. He said wars are waged to make profits for large corporations.

What's the difference?

WASHINGTON, (AP)—President Carter says he is tighter with the government's money and stronger on defense than his potential rival, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. But otherwise, he says, "there is little real incompatibility between us."

The president assessed the Massachusetts Democrat's accomplishments and leadership ability as "excellent."

Carter's remarks were made in a television interview taped Saturday in Boston for broadcast Sunday evening.

The appearance capped a good political week for Carter. His standing rose in the polls, he won the Florida caucuses by a 2-1 margin, and he received kind words from Chicago mayor Jane Byrne, who also called on Sen. Kennedy to reconsider jumping into the race for the Democratic presidential nomination. But despite her call, Kennedy appeared poised for such a race.

In most instances, Carter said, he and Kennedy agree. But then he listed two areas where they do not.

"Senator Kennedy is much more inclined toward the old philosophy of pouring out new programs and new money to meet a social need...I'm much more inclined to try to make existing programs work efficiently and start up new programs only when it's absolutely necessary."

The second area was defense, Carter said. "I would be in favor of much stronger defense commitments than his records shows."

Heightened tensions

KHOK SUNG, Thailand (AP)—Mortar crews firing from inside Cambodia pounded a Thai village marketplace with a barrage of 20 shells Sunday, killing four persons and wounding seven others. The attack, blamed on Vietnamese troops, heightened tensions between Thailand and Vietnam.

It was the second such mortar attack against Thai territory in a week.

The open market in this town 120 miles east of Bangkok is used by Cambodians who cross the border to buy black market items from Thai traders. One of the dead was a Cambodian, and the others were Thais.

The area was cleared after the shelling. But the Thai army did not retaliate.

Thai officials said it appeared the shells were fired by mortar men with the Vietnamese troops that have been fighting inside Cambodia to wipe out the last vestiges of former Premier Pol Pot's guerrilla army.

Abortion information available to students

By CINDY ELMORE

Information about abortions is available to James Madison University students through a variety of channels, including the campus Health Center, Harrisonburg Health Department, and "Listening Ear" hotline.

A recent survey funded by Zero Population Growth reports that college-aged Virginians have a higher abortion rate than any other age group in Virginia.

"If persons come to us and know they want an abortion, we have information on where they can go. We don't influence them one way or the other, but most girls I deal with are no longer keeping their babies," said Bobbie Horne, Harrisonburg Health Department Family Services nurse.

ACCORDING to Jeanne Dyer, campus Health Center coordinator of student relations, several abortion clinics are available in Richmond, Roanoke, Tidewater, and the Washington D.C. area. Prices range from $100 to $175, depending upon the clinic. Most abortion clinics also have other gynecological services, she said.

Requirements for parental or spousal consent was made illegal for obtaining abortions or related treatments in a recent Supreme Court decision.

According to Dyer, post-abortion check-ups are performed at the campus Health Center.

The overall number of abortions performed in the United States rose from 587,000 in 1972 to almost 1.2 million in 1976. Of these women, 75 percent were unmarried, 67 percent were white, and 20 percent had already had one abortion. In addition, according to the 1978 Statistical Abstracts of the United States, 65 percent of the women were between the ages of 15 to 24.

Called the "last-chance method of birth control," abortions terminated one pregnancy for every 2.8 live births in the U.S. in 1976, despite tremendous opposition to the procedure.

THE U.S. SUPREME Court declared abortions legal in this country in 1973, but a massive "right to life" movement has succeeded in promoting additional legislation in its favor. A major movement has been underway for federal and state aid to pay for abortions.

Currently, only 15 states and the District of Columbia still pay for all or most abortions under Medicaid. New Jersey, for example, once paid for 10,000 abortions a year, but now only pays for about 240.

But according to the June 5, 1978 issue of Newsweek, clinics and doctors are beginning to lower costs for abortions, and groups such as Planned Parenthood are allocating larger portions of their budgets for abortion loans and direct payments. Movements for legislation in Akron, Ohio have resulted in a controversial requirement that women must take the fetal remains of aborted babies to a licensed funeral director.

Although the death rate resulting from illegal abortions is high, legal abortions actually are safer than live births, according to Newsweek. Legal abortions result in 3.2 deaths of the mother per 100,000, while the correlate for live births is 12.8. The most common procedure—vacuum aspiration—takes about five minutes to perform.

★ JMU

activity causes pregnancy. Couples should discuss all considerations—the failure rate, the inconvenience—and not wait until the bedroom. And I'm not 100 percent sure that the burden should have to be only the female's."

Confidential pregnancy testing for students is available at the Health Center. Although the pregnancy test actually is completed at Rockingham Memorial Hospital, all student requests must come through the Health Center.

To preserve confidentiality, results of pregnancy tests are not disclosed over the telephone. Results are only given in person and only to the girl who requested the test.

ACCORDING TO Dyer, pregnancy statistics comprising all JMU students are unavailable since all students wishing to have the test do not come through the campus Health Center. Many go to private physicians or to the Harrisonburg Health Department for testing.

Girls with positive pregnancy test results do not necessarily have to see a Health Center physician, she added. "But if they do, that's fine."

"It's important that the student knows these records are confidential. They're never with academic records," Dyer explained. "We are doing more pregnancy tests than five years ago. That doesn't necessarily mean there are more girls on campus who are pregnant. I'd like to think it's because students realize that things are confidential here."

As an alternative to Health Center pregnancy testing,

Dyer is not against the EPT, the Early Pregnancy Test kit—a do-it-yourself procedure to test for pregnancy, sold over-the-counter in drug stores. She does feel that they are too expensive, though. EPTs cost $10 to $11, while the hospital laboratory charge is $7.50 for a pregnancy test through the Health Center.

THE EPT IS A urine test and can be used only once. It cannot detect pregnancy until a woman has been pregnant for about three or four weeks.

An investigation in the November 1978 issue of Consumer Reports disclosed that positive pregnancy results with the EPT are accurate 97 percent of the time. But a negative result offers no assurance that a woman is not pregnant. One study showed that 20 percent of women with negative EPT results actually were pregnant. In a second study, the percentage rose to 25 percent.

Therefore, negative results with the EPT necessitate a second test in a week, costing another $10 to $11 if another EPT is used.

To use the EPT, a woman must follow a nine-step procedure that, according to Consumer Reports, can easily be miscalculated. For example, the test tube must stand perfectly still for exactly two hours before the result can be read in the bottom of the tube. The test can give an inaccurate result if the slightest vibration occurs or if the result is read too early or too late.

Furthermore, most obstetricians require a second test after the EPT, regardless of the result.

Cabbie encounters road reality

By DREW NICKELL

They can be found in almost any city. But most of them go unnoticed until someone needs to go somewhere.

"Taxi!"

A stereotyped cab driver may be pictured as an overweight, uneducated, rough-mannered slob, but a lot of people seem to forget that many cab drivers are moonlighters supplementing their incomes outside their respective professions. Student cabbies are no exception.

Michael Dubus, a senior at James Madison University, is a part-time cab driver for City Cab of Harrisonburg. Dubus has been a cab driver for 14 months and obviously enjoys his work.

"I really don't think of it as work," Dubus said, showing a warm smile beneath a scraggly beard. "All I do is sit on my a--."

Not really.

ALTHOUGH it's not dangerous here, there is a lot more to driving a cab in Harrisonburg than might be expected. Being city owned, City Cab provides free service to many of the community's elderly and disabled. Mentally retarded children are taken to and from school via taxi cabs at no cost to their families. At work, Dubus encounters more "special children" in a given day than most people do in an entire year. He recalled that when he first started driving for City Cab, it was difficult for him to adjust to seeing and dealing with these children on a daily basis.

"It's really sad to know what these kids go through every day of their lives," he

ANOTHER aspect of driving a cab is the vast number of passengers who are intoxicated when they get into the cab.

"I've had drunkards urinate, vomit and pass out right inside the car," said Dubus, "and every once in a while I'll get somebody who really doesn't know where he's going. When this happens, all I can do is take them down to the police station and let them handle it."

"Some of the things they say to me really crack me up, but this doesn't change the fact that they're drunk. Sometimes, I'll get a guy who starts giving me a lot of s--t. They start getting real tough until you give it right back to them. Then, they back down and shut up in a hurry."

According to Dubus, irresponsible behavior is a big problem for drunks, especially the way they handle their money.

"One drunk mistook a $100 bill for a $1 bill," Dubus recalled. "Most cabbies treat the drunks right and won't take advantage of this. A cabbie is very often a drunk's best friend and most drunks realize this. So we maintain a pretty good relationship with them."

Dubus pointed out that the busiest time for drunks is the first part of the month when government supplemental income checks arrive.

"They always have a lot of cash then," he said.

CABBIES provide transportation for elderly citizens. Dubus especially enjoys driving for the elderly.

"The thing that makes them so interesting," said Dubus,

'It makes me real mad when I get a rider who stinks up my cab. I swear you'd think some of these people never heard of soap and water.'

said, "but after a while, you get used to it and it doesn't hurt so much anymore."

One problem of being a cabbie involves the personal hygiene-or lack of it-of many passengers. According to Dubus, cleanliness in non-existent for a lot of his customers.

"Some of these people are absolutely filthy," Dubus said, shaking his head in disgust. "They really do smell bad. It makes me real mad when I get a rider who stinks up my cab. I swear you'd think some of these people had never heard of soap and water, the way they smell."

"is the fact that they aren't afraid to say anything that's on their minds."

"The old ladies will tell you everything from how bad they feel to how much things have changed 'since I was a young girl.' They seem to complain a lot, but the vast majority of them are really sweet."

Dubus said that older men, on the other hand, generally talk about the way things used to be.

Dubus stated most of his passengers are in the lower income bracket.

"Since a lot of these people don't have the money to own and operate their own cars,"

MICHAEL DUBUS, JMU senior, drives a taxi to pay the bills.

he said, "we are their sole means of transportation."

When Dubus has a customer, it doesn't always mean that he has a passenger in the rear seat of his taxi cab.

"I get a lot of courier errands from various corporations in the valley," he said. "Usually I'll have to take checks to and from the bank or I'll have to pick up a part somewhere and deliver it somewhere else."

"Once, during the summer when it was real hot out," he recalled, "one of these companies had me drive out to a department store and pick up some portable fans. I had a helluva time getting them into the cab, but they were the quietest customers I've ever had."

DUBUS enjoys driving a cab for a lot of reasons.

"Aside from the opportunity I have to talk to and get to know some people," he said, "my work schedule is flexible enough not to interfere with the 15 hours I take at Madison."

"I'm out driving around, which is a lot better than being cooped up inside, and since I'm paid by the hour, rather than on commission, the money is steady enough to keep the bills paid."

Dubus said that he will continue working for City Cab, at least until he graduates in May. One thing is certain about driving a taxi in Harrisonburg: It isn't the most pleasant job in town. And Michael Dubus wouldn't have it any other way.

Actor looks for the 'fresh detail'

By GRACE McCracken

Portraying a personality isn't merely a matter of memorizing lines and spouting them off while strutting across a stage.

It's understanding the character, knowing what makes him tick, and being sensitive to his point of view that makes the difference, according to Ritch Brinkley, a member of the Milwaukee Repertory Company and a guest actor who played Falstaff in the recent main stage performance of "Henry IV."

Acting is the "study of people, their psychology, how they work, think, and their minute mannerisms," Brinkley said. Once you understand people, the acting becomes natural, you automatically think and respond as the character.

BRINKLEY'S awareness of people and what motivates them was apparent to Phoebe Sutton, a James Madison University senior who portrayed Hal in the recent production. Brinkley "really listened" to what other people had to say, Sutton said.

Brinkley believes that a character must be understood before he can be developed on stage in an accurate and convincing manner. But no interpretation is ironclad. There is always room for spontaneity, according to Brinkley.

Brinkley varied his performance, never interpreting one scene the same way. It was "exciting" working with him, Sutton said. The "variations" kept the audience from getting bored with the repetition and more in key with the personality.

Although Brinkley doesn't like repetition, it's the mainstay of a professional actor's life. "Unfortunately, one performance is not going to be as good one day as it is on another," Brinkley said. "That's human nature."

in a film, Brinkley said. On stage, there's a "sharing" experience with the audience. The actor relates with the audience and its response "feeds energy" to the actor, Brinkley explained.

But in film, the actor substitutes the relationship he had with the audience with the lense of the camera. "I'm literally able to relate with the lense of the camera. It becomes a living thing," Brinkley said.

"It's a living thing to me."

RITCH BRINKLEY, equity actor with the Milwaukee Repertory Company, believes acting comes naturally if you understand people.

LITTLE mannerisms, or tricks of the trade, are often used to relieve the boredom of successive performances. You begin to look for "something new, some fresh detail," Brinkley said.

During "Henry IV," Brinkley took advantage of the unexpected to create this fresh detail. When Falstaff's pillow "crown" kept unexpectedly falling off during a tavern scene, it was just added to the episode as part of the natural result of drunken foolishness, according to Sutton.

Brinkley's longest running part was in the play "Count of Monte Cristo," which ran for 150 performances — two times a day, six days a week. This causes an actor's mind to automatically reject anything related to his role, Brinkley said. After his 100th performance, an actor will begin searching for variety, seeking that minute detail, he explained.

Brinkley, an equity actor, has played Tevye in "Fiddler on the Roof," Peter in "The Zoo Story" and Sir Toby Belch in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." Brinkley has also acted in a number of films, including "The Great Wallendas," an NBC movie of the week, and "Brubaker," an upcoming release starring Robert Redford.

There's a distinct difference between acting on stage in a theater or performing a part

WORKING with a camera is more "intimate. The camera is much closer and more subtle," he explained.

When Brinkley first began acting as a professional, he was interested in the "fame, glory and fortune" of the acting world. "That was my stars-in-your-eyes period of my career," he said.

From there, Brinkley said he gradually changed from a performer to an artist. Now, he "shuns publicity, fame," and doesn't like to be recognized. "It's not my main goal, but the money is nice," Brinkley admitted, laughingly describing himself as a "white-collar worker."

Brinkley thinks student actors should study people. Plays are not written about actors, he said. They're written about different kinds of people in different situations. Student actors should know how people work and develop a sensitivity toward them to understand their points of view.

Good professional training is just as important, he said. A training program in a college environment, along with work in a residential or college theater, is a good way to gain valuable experience, according to Brinkley.

But Brinkley warned acting students against "getting locked into the theater and getting tunnel vision." The stage can't teach an actor everything. Learning to act involves learning to watch.

Staged chaos in Wampler

By WES WILLOUGHBY

The chaos was somehow organized enough to easily watch and enjoy in the production of "See How They Run" that played last week in Wampler Experimental Theatre.

The confusion recurs, however, in the retelling.

Director Robert Dodd assembled a young, fresh, and seemingly fledgling cast for this farce. The players, however, turned in an able performance, and the small flashes of inconfidence that managed to escape were infrequent.

All the action was set in the household of Vicar Lionel Toop, played by freshman Nick Wuehrman, a weak-kneed, bumbling simpleton. Wuehrman's portrayal was consistent and thorough, comically establishing the tone of the play.

The initial craziness was borne in the actions of the impulsive Mrs. Penelope Toop, played by sophomore Janet Eason, who retained her character's silly ideology to complement Vicar Toop's conservativeness.

Mrs. Toop must conceal her non-conformity to conservative British ethics behind the back of the prim and proper Miss Skillon, a reactionary old maid played by sophomore Carol McHale. McHale's performance was tight and withdrawn, just as Miss Skillon should feel while in the Toop residence.

No matter how hard Penelope Toop tried, Miss Skillon always seemed to show up in the hall of the Toop vicarage at the worst possible moment.

the end of the first act, when an old American army friend from Penelope's USO days visited the Toops. Corporal Clive Winton, played by freshman Karl Kyler, sounded almost British himself, but was portrayed with a very subtle implication of the small differences between American irreverence and the older, more stereotyped British irreverence.

Winton and Penelope, while recalling a play they did together in the USO, fall into the scene where they played a man and a woman fighting. Miss Skillon, mistaking the game as real, tries to stop their "quarrel," but a stray fist socks her into unconsciousness.

At this point the quality of the play reached its peak — the professional arrangements of the movement occurring between Kyler and Eason, and McHale's placement at the edge of the fight. McHale's unuttered gasp is felt when she is hit. The lights snap off at this moment, and all is timed to knock the audience out with Miss Skillon.

The real action began in the second act. Winton and Penelope are out to a play, and Vicar Toop is involved in church duties for the evening. Miss Skillon lies unconscious on the vicar's couch, this time inebriated by some cooking sherry she found in a nearby cabinet.

This is the scene the vicar finds upon returning. He tries to force an explanation from his maid, Ida, played by freshman Gail Weatherholtz. Ida provided a refreshing anchor for the audience, as the events that

Woodsmen shares way of life

By DREW NICKELL

Autumn is at its colorful peak. Nature's flora is afire with reds and yellows. Who could even think of chopping down these magnificent trees?

Bernard Weisgerber.

A native of Wisconsin, Weisgerber is in the logging business. He's every bit as burly as the legendary lumber giant, Paul Bunyan. And when Weisgerber walks into a room, sporting a flannel shirt, suspenders and a bushy red beard, one would expect to see Babe, the gigantic blue ox, following close behind.

"When I was a kid," Weisgerber recalled in a deep voice, "my father gave to me the antique tools that my grandfather had used when he was in the cabinetmaking business. I soon developed a keen interest in the more traditional methods of working with wood. I guess I've worked with and around wood as long as I can remember."

BEGINNING this Saturday, he's bringing his knowledge to James Madison University, where he'll be teaching a two-part course in woodsmen's skills and log cabin building. The first part of the course will cover proper uses of various tools and offer information on how to use wood to heat homes efficiently. The second part will cover advanced woodsmen's skills and teach students how to build log cabins.

Weisgerber is quick to point out that logging is difficult, dangerous work. Insurance agencies rate logging as the most hazardous occupation, more dangerous than coal mining, fire fighting, and even police work, according to Weisgerber.

"It's a hard, honest living and despite what most folks think, it's no fun at all," he said, stroking his beard. "But it's what I know and what I do and this is why I like it."

Logging is so much a part of Weisgerber's life that he's even a lumberjack in his spare time. He said that he enjoys attending lumberjack conventions throughout the country, and having won several local and state competitions, has competed in the National Logging Championship. Contests like these feature events like axe-throwing, crosscut-sawing, log-rolling, log-throwing, tree-climbing and speed-chopping.

WEISGERBER'S business, the Ironwood Logging Co., does a lot more than chop trees. It is also in the business of building log cabins. Weisgerber indicates that there is a large and growing interest in this kind of home. Most log cabins are heated with wood stoves, the most economical way to heat a home, according to Weisgerber.

"Besides a lot of blisters you'll get from swinging an axe from taking this course," Weisgerber said, "you'll have nothing to lose except a lot of heating bills."

Registration for Weisgerber's course will take place this Saturday at 8 a.m. in front of the Z-lot tunnel beneath I-81. A $27 registration fee, covering expenses for the first part of the course, is required.

Dancers surprise and impress

By DONNA CEDAR

The four brightly colored figures darting across campus last Wednesday were not practical jokers....

They were The Greenhouse Dance Ensemble from New York.

The dancers performed the "Deck Dance," designed especially for any large, open space. Stairs, benches and cement walls, which would usually become obstacles, were integrated into the structure of the dance.

Most outstanding in the 20-minute piece was the use of space. Unafraid to cover as much territory as possible, the dancers began with high-energy level leaps and runs taking them from the Warren University Union to D-Hall and beyond.

While some of the dancers could not be found, the male dancer, Whit Carman, performed in his own little space. Contrasting the opening movements, Carman performed a series of small, slower movements emphasizing maximum movement in a minimum amount of space.

CARMAN was joined by the female dancers and the group began walking forward, backward, and up and down stairs. The group, walking briskly, dropped off one member, then another, then another until each dancer began performing his own movement in his own space.

Each of the four dancers performed a variety of "sustained" movements. Their perfect spine rolls and agility enabled them to create shapes unique to their movement and body type.

Although it was impossible to focus on all four dancers at once, it was more a surprise than a distraction. At any time, all dancers were in perfect body alignment.

The Greenhouse dancers also performed a bit of acrobatics that impressed everyone.

The four dancers came together to form a shape. One dancer did a slow somersault into the shape and ended up in the fetal position clinging to the back of the male dancer.

THE ENSEMBLE danced well together, as if each dancer was striving for a unified goal. Apart, each dancer had a unique and distinctive characteristic.

Lillo Way, choreographer, maintained her beautiful "turn-out" throughout, especially in her deep plies. Her thin physique exaggerated her frequent percussive movements.

Kristin Peterson kept her outstanding alignment throughout jumps, runs, leaps and small intricate movements. It was her alignment which seemed to give her the power to move so freely.

Nancy Stern Bain appeared energetic and maintained her momentum throughout the entire dance.

Whit Carman was noted for his brave jump off the wall and his ability to perform difficult movements in high, awkward places.

The dance could have been used as an exercise in the use of space, which is often difficult to use to its fullest capacity. Given a great amount of ground to cover, members of the Greenhouse Dance Ensemble proved their talents as dancers as well as athletes.

Artfile Waterworks

By BARBARA MILLER

Watercolors and handmade paperworks by students and members of the community are currently on display at Artworks downtown gallery.

The gallery is located in the Harrisonburg-Rockingham Historical Society Building at 301 S. Main St. The gallery is open 10-4 Monday through Friday. The show runs until Nov. 2.

The show features work done by students in the watercolor class last semester and in a papermaking workshop held over the summer. Rebecca Hawkins, assistant professor of art, "tried to make a list of students who had really nice work and lived close enough we could get in touch with them," then invited them to submit work for the show. Thirteen artists contributed to the 21-piece show.

"The show looks very professional," according to May Cupp, one of the artists. Many of the artists have had work shown in Sawhill or Artworks Gallery last year, although this was their first try at watercolor or papermaking. "That was my first (watercolor) class," said Craig Baugher. "I was always afraid of it before."

MANY of the people from the community are interested in art and have taken other classes at James Madison University. "I've been coming down (from Lexington) for two years," Cupp said, "taking classes on Tuesday and Thursday." Sue McCoy has also attended classes for two years. She decided to take the watercolor class because "I was teaching a watercolor class (to senior citizens) and decided to take the class to improve and learn new techniques."

The show is one of the best Artworks has produced this year. Because there are not as many mediums featured but just as many artists as other shows, it is easier to concentrate while still getting a sampling of work.

Some of the more interesting pieces in the show are the three paperworks by Liz Kregloe, an untitled watercolor by Nancy Boland, the paperworks of May Cupp, and "Percheron," a watercolor by Polly Holden.

EVERETT HILL and Bruce Burns of Fat Ammons Band jam during Thursday's performance.

Fat Ammon's

Fat Ammon's Band, a Norfolk-based jazz and disco band, performed for a crowd of approximately 200 in the Warren University Union ballroom Thursday night.

Despite the fact that the group must play disco to keep food on the table, they are noted for the excellent jazz that they play for audiences sensitive enough to appreciate it.

Perhaps someday Fat Ammons will receive the recognition as serious jazz musicians that they deserve. (Fat Ammon's Band will appear at Scotland Yard Wednesday night.)

Traveling dancers

Two dances performed by the JMU Dance Theatre will be included in the Mid-Atlantic Region Dance Festival Oct. 26, 27 and 28 at Hollins College in Roanoke, Va.

Both dances—"Wrapper," performed by the folk ensemble, and "Smaug," performed by the modern ensemble—were among four dance pieces chosen from presentations given by six participating colleges to perform in the Mid-Atlantic Gala Performance. Dance selections from VCU and North Carolina School of the Arts were also chosen for the competition.

Dances will be selected from each of the six regional dance performances to participate in the National Festival, to be held next year at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

★ 'See How They Run'

WHILE HE is trying to find out why Miss Skillon lies drunken on his couch, Vicar Toop receives a call from the police, warning him of an escaped Russian spy in the area.

Sure enough, with Ida out of the room on an errand, the spy shows up to knock out Vicar Toop and take him from the room for his clothes.

Now the Bishop of Lax, a scruffy old gentlemen, played by Jim Hayhurst, arrives for a surprise visit. Shortly afterward, Penelope and Winton return.

Winton is disguised in one of Toop's clerical uniforms so he can sneak off his military base.

By this time, the Russian spy is also in one of Toop's uniforms. Ben Boyer, in this role, adds an aura of the old-time gangster to the play. The spy has stashed the unconscious Reverend Toop in his bedroom, just where Ida hid the groggy Miss Skillon.

When the Bishop of Lax is finally bedded upstairs, Winton can dare to show himself. But the bishop returns for a moment, and mistakes Winton for the vicar. While this confusion is sorting itself out, the real Vicar escapes—clad only in his underwear—and attacks Winton. Winton can only run, and a merry chase evolves: a desperate Winton, chased by a strangely crazed Vicar Toop, followed by a puzzled Bishop of Lax, with a curious Russian spy taking up the end.

PENELOPE and Ida are dealing with an escaped—and still drunken—Miss Skillon when the Reverend Arthur Humphrey arrives. Ron Pechtimaldijian played the perfect straight man to the swirling pandemonium. Humphrey is only pleasantly surprised and slightly curious as the four men keep barreling through the set.

'...desperate Winton, chased by a strangely crazed vicar, followed by a puzzled bishop, with a curious Russian spy taking up the end....'

The plot weaves so intricately through this action as to be unfathomable. But it was enjoyable. The audience had to give up following the sequence of events, thus forcing them to relax and enjoy the hilarious melee.

Eventually, the chase ends, and a policeman arrives on the scene in search of the spy. Sergeant Towers, played by Dave Dvorscak with appropriate Monty Python inspiration, is able to sort out the spy in the mob of Vicar suits, but not without proper misdirection.

Director Robert Dodd was judicious in his selection of this play. A farce as active as this presents no moral or hidden meaning, which makes for ease in production. A small, energetic young cast was able to portray its parts vigorously and accurately.

The cast and crew worked hard to complement their abilities with the script. Each character accurately portrayed a stereotypical British character, and the original material was humorous enough to compensate for any inadequacies that may have appeared.

The opening performance of "See How They Run" deserved much more than a paltry crowd of a couple of dozen. This made for a difficult performance, but the players kept the small audience laughing louder than a large crowd often does.

Dukes down Towson State, 3-0

By DAVE PARKER

Aided by a 26-19 shooting advantage, the James Madison University soccer team soundly defeated Towson State University 3-0, Sunday at Madison Stadium.

Though neither the number of shots taken nor the final score were indicative of the domination the Dukes enjoyed. Despite Towson's 19 shots, very few tested goalkeeper Jim Edwards, who was forced to make but seven saves before leaving early in the second half for a much needed rest.

The Dukes opened the game with the same control oriented style of play that they have attempted to accomplish all season. Against a tired Towson team, this strategy paid off. The Tigers could not keep up with the Dukes run and shoot pace.

Towson, coming off a loss to the University of Virginia, was not rested and could not stop the constant pressure applied by the Dukes forwards and midfielders.

Just three minutes into the match, fullback Mark Bost overlapped into the front line. He received a throw in from midfielder George Ackerman and broke thru the Tigers defense for the first score of the game. It was Bost's second goal in as many games, a rarity for any fullback.

Before Towson goalkeeper Marty Guolo had a chance to recover, he was challenged again. Forward Bob Apt broke through the defense for one of three consecutive shots that barely missed the goal.

The Dukes continued their onslaught, rocketing shots left and right at the goalkeeper, but were still unable to tally another goal. "I was pleased with the first 15 minutes of play," commented Coach Vanderwarker. "I was concerned that we had no killer instinct. We should have put them away early. I didn't want to let them off the hook."

Putting Towson away was exactly what forward Jon Mullenex had on his mind when he stole the ball from a Towson fullback with 8:29 left in the first half and broke through on a three-on-one situation. Mullenex slipped the ball past the lone defender to Bob Apt and the opportunistic forward fired the ball past Guolo and the Dukes were on top, 2-0.

Leading 2-0 against a seemingly exhausted club, the Dukes came out even stronger in the second half and fired five consecutive shots on goal before Towson even crossed midfield with the ball.

The Dukes continued to pressure and the frustrated Tiger fullbacks, in an attempt to continue the rout. Ultimately this led to the Dukes final goal at the twenty-minute mark. Substitute forward David Zigelboim broke past the defenders and to have an open shot on goal.

However, a Towson fullback brutally tackled him from behind and the Dukes were awarded a penalty kick. Back Billy Gannon took the twelve-yard shot against Towson's goalkeeper, and easily placed it by Guolo. When the goalkeeper dove, he placed the ball to the right.

Coach Vanderwarker elected to give many of his starters a rest and substituted freely throughout the remainder of the match.

"A few starters have some nagging injuries and they needed the rest," commented Vanderwarker,

"This was a good game for the others to gain some experience and rest some of the injured players."

Perhaps the most interesting item of the game took place with sixteen minutes remaining. Towson back Mike Ignatowski was thrown out for shouting at the official. Not to be out done, Towson head coach Rich Bartos, enraged at the ejection, proceeded to explain to the referee that he was the poorest official he had ever seen.

Bartos continued for over a minute with his low opinion and eventually found himself sitting in the bleachers watching the game, courtesy of the referee who had just ejected him.

Five minutes later a Towson forward received a yellow warning card for delaying the game when he kicked the ball out of play before a Dukes direct kick.

The circus atmosphere continued throughout the remainder of the game, but the Dukes managed to hold to gain their second shut out of the year.

Seeking to get ready for Wednesdays match against UVA, the Coach Vanderwarker had his team do conditioning drills after the game, a move questioned by many but explained rather clearly by Vanderwarker.

"Virginia is ranked in the nations Top 20, and this is a important gave for te State title. Last year we tied in overtime so we want to be conditioned for any situation that we may face."

Throughout the conditioning drills, Vanderwarker continued to repeat that the team must be ready for the Virginia game. And the intensity of the aftergame workout certainly showed that the Dukes would be ready to play.

New meaning for saying 'you've been Duked'

By DENNIS SMITH

The old expression "you've been Duked" has taken new significance in recent weeks.

Everybody is talking about it. Not just in Harrisonburg and Charlottesville, but all over the state. The Dukes 69-9 loss (if that's the word for it) has become immortalized throughout the Commonwealth.

Many have been inspired in there own way immortalize the contest. Newspaper writers use terms like "Virginia's second largest score ever" or "mismatch" when describing the game.

Television and radio commentators say "wait to you hear this one."

My parents and their friends are even talking about it. The first thing they said when I entered their door Saturday was "what happened at UVA."

My only answer was "I guess, you would had to have been there."

Some UVA. students send letters to their JMU friends saying "that's all right, we can still be friends even if my football team killed yours."

Others resort to sending sympathy letters. Some just to laugh themselves to sleep.

But, take heart JMU students. It nothing to get upset about. In a few years, you look back and laugh, too.

It was as new beginning for Dukes' football, bleak as it may be. Brighter days are ahead. Granted, maybe not in our time. But someday we'll be taking schools to the cleaners or in this case to the white washers.

However, let's not forget about the loss to soon. Just thing, next time you're at a party back home you can say "my school lost to Virginia 69-9. Top that."

I guess what I'm trying to say is take the loss in stride and laugh. It's the only thing you can do.

If you're having trouble doing it, here's something to help you. JMU student Diane Woolard received a sympathy card from her friend Randy Morrisette, a University of Virginia alumni. Attached was a poem Morrisette wrote about just this subject.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME

They had lost a few, since the season had began;
Having their sights set on playing Division I;
But the Dukes were proud, not about to die;
Though rated underdogs, they were still going to try.

The day was beautiful at Jim Madison U.,
Maybe the football game would be that way too;
The skies of Charlottesville were dismal and gray,
Forecasting the fate of the proud Dukes that day.

Though scoring the fewer points many a time,
The opposition looked like giants on the line;
Averaging twenty pounds more than the JMU crew
And lightning speed in the feet of the famous backfield two.

The UVA first team was awesome that day
Accumulating 48 points in thirty minutes of play;
Taylor and Virgitoro ran almost untouched down the field,
While the UVA defense only three points did yield.

Then the second and third teams were put into play
But so devastated the Dukes that even they couldn't stay.
A message was sent through the crowd, so they say Giving all who so desired a chance to play NCAA

Only Grandpa's clock ticking down gave the Dukes a reprieve,
Unfriendly Charlottesville they were happy to leave.
The 69-9 thrashing was hardly a thrill;
The grass was greener on their won side of the hill.

The future weeks should be brighter for the JMU crew
Finally playing some teams in their own Division II;
The mighty Madison Dukes we may never again see Challenging the powerful Cavaliers of Virginia's University.

Cowboys livened up daily drama

By DAN McNIEL

For two years I experienced the daily drama of the familiar path to the post office where a peek inside the cubicle yields either appreciative smiles or an empty, gnawing feeling inside.

This year in my role as co-sports editor I am greeted daily with mail. While I never know what the next envelope will bring, one can receive very interesting and amusing pieces of mail during the course of a semester.

The post office greets me with everything from news of the Old Dominion Athletic conference and a steady diet of JMU sports information releases to the obscure letters, such as one inviting me to cover a collegiate golf tournament in Bermuda to be held during spring break in 1980.

There was one letter last week that stunned me at first, but made more sense when I gave the item additional thought and consideration. I received a questionnaire from the Dallas Cowboys Football Club (in care of 6116 North Central Expressway) asking for some information about the pro potential of players here and opponents we had played thus far.

The Dallas computerized, methodical, and occasionally humanless organization has received deserved criticism, harsh and favorable, from the media. The have assisted the NFC champions of a year ago. The second, third and fourth parts regard the potential prospects viewed this year.

The last part of the questionnaire is especially intriguing. "Kindly list the person who you feel is the athlete at your school. (Player you list does not have to be a football player.)"

The idea presented here is that once every few years a team may find a League. Plus this one enclosed a colorful embossed sticker for your car, room or bathroom.

Another piece of mail of special interest to the more dedicated fans arrived this week. The Miller Brewing Company has recently issued a fine sports magazine, titled "Sports Bulletin: The Miller Guide to Intercollegiate Football." In the premier edition the focal point was the Missouri Valley Conference but there was enough about college football in the 24 pages to interest the avid fan.

Perhaps its best section in this edition is "If You Were Coach," which is the answer to every armchair quarterback's dream: replaying critical strategys of the past. Their is no price listed anywhere throughout the magazine and one may enquire about it at a local newstand.

If it's not available locally, there is an adress you can write to to obtain a free copy of the periodical which compacts as much information in its pages as Sports Illustrated does in 60. The address is Attn: Anne Arkridge, 13-30 Corporation, 505 Market St., Knoxville, Tenn. 37902.

In a country racked with high prices and bad news, the fifteen cents for the Sports Bulletin is one of the best bargains.

'There was one letter last week that stunned me.

I received a questionnaire from the Dallas Cowboys.'

subject was treated in some detail by former Cowboy wide receiver Peter Gent in his semi-biographical book "North Dallas Forty," released as a movie this spring.

The memo, affixed with the official Cowby logo at the top is broken down into five parts and is from Gil Brandt, the club's vice president and a big cog in the Dallas mammoth personnel machine.

The first portion of the letter thanks the editor for past favors, though to my knowledge this is the first time I superb prospect who has little football experience, but loaded with raw talent that can be developed into the mold of a first rate football player.

And first rate is what you have to credit this organization with for one reason alone. Their extensive coverage of all areas in their recruiting could be one of the many reasons why you see the boys from Texas in the playoffs year after year.

One thing is certain. I will not receive any questionnaire from the other 25 football teams in the National

Field Hockey

Team loses to W&M, tops ASU

By CATHY HANKS

James Madison University's field hockey team lost an important match against William and Mary 5-1 on Friday, and then rallied to overcome Appalachian State 5-1 here on Saturday.

The loss to William & Mary was the third in a string of Division I games defeats for the Duchesses. JMU was defeated in strokes by both Virginia, 4-2, and Virginia Tech, 4-3.

The Duchesses' Erin Marovelli, with an assist from Sue Deremer, score the lone goal against William & Mary at 19:05 into the first half.

Less than four minutes later, the Warriors' Basla Deren tied the score. At 27:05, Pixie Hamilton scored the second goal in for William & Mary to finished the first-half scoring.

The halftime statistics were overwhelmingly in William & Mary's favor. The Warriors showed an aggressive offense with 19 shots on goal and 12 corners compared to JMU's two goal shots and three corners.

The Duchesses' goalie Tara Kelly had 12 saves one to for William & Mary's Sara Forrestel.

JMU's defense proved to be much stronger statistically in the second half but still wasn't effective. William & Mary scored three successive goals to clinch the victory.

Susan Aldsworth, Sharra Kelly, and Susan Shoaf hit goals for the Warriors.

The Duchesses came back on Saturday against Appalachian State. This was the second contest between the two teams with the first outcome ending in a scoreless tie.

JMU's well distributed offense controlled the game, a different player scoring each time. Cara Eisenberg started the scoring for the Duchesses. Assisted by Barb Sabitus, Eisenberg fired one in at 8:34 in the first half. Deremer hit the team's second goal of an assist from Theresa Williams and Marovelli assisted by Nancy Koury to add another score.

Appalachian's Kathy Moran managed to penetrate JMU's defense and scored her team's only goal at 28:54 to make it 3-1 at the half.

The second half proved to be uneventful until JMU iced the game by scoring two quick goals. Williams hit Eisenberg and JMU's Sarah Heilman assisted by Williams put the final score at 5-1.

The Duchesses lead

statistically by a large margin.

JMU had a total of 27 shots on goal and 10 corners to ASU's 10 shots and five corners. The Duchesses' goalie Kelly was attributed with four saves to ASU's Leigh Sumner's.

Girls' soccer club proves successful in first full season of competition

EDITOR'S NOTE— This is the first of a series of articles dealing with the club sports at James Madison University, that will run in Tuesday issues. Next week's feature will be on men's lacross.

By DIANE FITZPATRICK

The James Madison University Women's Club Soccer team successfully continued it's strive for state supremacy by defeating Mary Washington College 3-1 in Fredericksburg Saturday.

The team was force to play the entire game with no substitutes because of injuries and scheduling conflicts.

The club took the lead early in the first half when Sharon Wicker scored off a corner kicked by Jeannie Ritter. Another goal by Ritter upped the JMU's margin to 2-0 at halftime.

The second half remained scoreless until Sandy Luther slammed the ball between the posts off a break away. Another Ritter goal was taken away on an offsidess call.

JMU's shutout was shattered when Mary Washington managed to score with 30 seconds remaining in the game.

JMU's coach Jim Angevine described the game as a "hard fought victory". He went on to add that he was "very proud of the players".

The University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill holds the distinction of being the only team to defeat JMU's women's soccer team.

The Tarheel's varsity girls overcame a 5-2 in Madison Stadium last Tuesday. The goals by Jeannie Ritter and Brenda Sylvia could not match up to UNC's powerful offensive showing.

"James Madison is the best team we ever played," said the Tar Hills coach. "I was surprised. The difference is that we are a varsity team training every day. They are just a club."

In its first game of the fall season the club defeated the University of Virginia all-star team 2-1. JMU's offense dominated on the muddy field from the start.

However, the team was unable to score until the second half when Jerrienne O'Day and Elaine Meekins each shot past the Cavaliers' goalie. Virginia's coach maintained that UVA "is a better team. They just outplayed us."

JMU's overall record since the club's formation last spring is 6-1. And JMU's coach Jim Angevine is pleased with team's performance.

"The girls have played exceptionally well considering the length of time we've worked together," he said.

The club has done an excellent job of pulling together and making things work, according to its president Susan Butles.

"It says something that a team like UNC is willing to travel to play us," Butles said. "We have a lot of potential. However, we need more support from the school."

"We have loads of talent," said Angevine. "I am certain that with time the team will become a power of the south."

Equitation team takes Cup, prepares for Friday's show

By DENNIS SMITH

The equitation team may be well on its way to defending its second-place ranking in last year's national standings.

The team began Saturday by winning its second James Madison University Collegiate Equitation Cup in the school's invitational horse show at Oak Manor Stables.

The team accumulated 44 points to outdistance three opponents. Hollins College placed second with 24 points, while Mary Baldwin and Longwood score four and two points respectively.

Kim Holt won seven first-place awards, including ribbons in the the open equitation, novice hunter and both the working hunter divisions.

She also took the honors in the green hunter sections and in the warm-up division.

The Duchesses' Gloria Harrington and Maria Grabowsky also won awards. Harrington captured first in beginner equitation, while Grabowsky took the championship of the reserve beginner section.

Friday, the team hopes to continue its drive toward national rankings. JMU and Mary Baldwin will co-host the 16-team intercollegiate show, which features some of the finest teams nationally. The show begins at 1 p.m. at Oak Manor Stables.

Smiling, jumping, watching and cleaning are all parts of equitation at JMU.

student minister Lina Stalcup, is only available to CCM at the discretion of Emmaus House residents.

Stalcup added that although attendance was low at the university union Tuesday night mass, the CCM Saturday and Sunday masses are too large to be held anywhere else on campus.

Sachs said that the Grafton-Stovall theater, academic buildings, or residence halls could provide the capacities needed for CCM.

"The idea is to suggest alternative programming sites for things that can be shifted. If mass can be shifted, fine. If not, nobody is saying they have to get rid of it."

CCM HAS attempted to reserve a residence hall for Tuesday night mass for several weeks, but according to CCM member Beth Welch, "there's just too much red tape involved. It's been three weeks and we haven't heard a thing."

CCM was only singled out because of its large proportional use of the WUU facilities, Sachs said. Conceivably, all 126 student groups can reserve the union; so from that number, CCM was using the building proportionally too much, he added.

Only one group, the Career Planning and Placement Office, schedules the WUU more than CCM, he said. But their situation is different because programs offered by the Career Planning Office are designed for all students, whereas CCM programming is restrictive, according to Sachs.

Another factor in the decision to limit CCM programming was that "we have a lot of religious groups on campus, but CCM used the building more so than others," Sachs said. "The Baptists, Lutherans, and Methodists all use off-campus facilities for meetings."

THE ELIMINATION of the Tuesday mass allows WUU facilities to be available to other groups needing meeting rooms on weeknights.

As an example, Sachs cited use of WUU meeting rooms for the last week in September. During that week, 68 groups met in the five university union meeting rooms. During the same week, CCM scheduled the use of meeting rooms twice and the ballroom once.

However, Sachs said that week was not representative of the entire month of September because the cutback of CCM programs had already taken place.

Jackson ahead of his time?

Editor's note: The following is the second in a two-part series offering different viewpoints on the value and effects of recent trips to the Middle East by Black U.S. leaders.

By ALVIN WALKER

"Whoever recognizes the so-called (Palestine Liberation Organization) recognizes genocide. They (recognize) the aim and the method to destroy a nation . . . to kill men, women, and children, and they rejoice in the achievement of these mass murders," Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said at a recent luncheon address in Jerusalem. According to the ignominious and inept statement of this former terrorist, over 115 nations of the world (including the U.N.) are

Israeli's mistake is that it views the PLO in absolute idealistic terms

'genociders,' although Begin's comment was directed towards the three Black-American leaders who have 'flocked' to the Middle East in the past month.

Recent fact-finding delegations to the Middle East were headed by Walter Fauntroy, chairman of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and District of Columbia representative; and by Georgia state representative Hosea Williams. The most recent and controversial delegation however, was headed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, national president of the operation PUSH (People United to Save Humanity). Begin and his cabinet 'snubbed' the black delegations by refusing to meet with them during their tours.

The bulk of criticism against Jackson's delegation has been made by Jewish writers who work for pro-Israeli newspapers and magazines in the U.S. Charges that Jackson went to Israel for his 'own personal aggrandizement' and 'just to have his picture taken' is flippant and absurd. This clergyman toured the Middle East because he cared.

Jackson's delegation also has been criticized by Arabs, and moderate black leaders. But that shows that "we were not demagogic, that we said things in Israel that they did not like and things in the Arab nations that they did not like," Jackson explained. Jackson anticipated that his actions would draw fire from more moderate blacks, such as Vernon Jordan, president of the National Urban League, and the NAACP's Executive Director Benjamin Hooks.

Jordan, without mentioning Jackson's name, called the recent Middle East delegations "sideshowes" that have "detracted American blacks from the vital survival issues," at home. He also said that harm was done to the domestic Black-Jewish relationship. Blacks should have a strong domestic base to work from before entering international affairs, Hooks said.

However, no one should be surprised by the disagreement among blacks over the Middle East, because "we are not a monolithic people," said Jackson. "We are resilient enough to disagree without being disagreeable."

The political effects of Jackson's tour cannot be fully assessed until after he meets with Robert Strass, special ambassador to the president on the Middle East. Jackson will discuss his trip and present documents to Strass stating that the PLO does not want to "exterminate Jews" or drive them "into the Mediterranean Sea."

The 'six-point' plan prepared by the PLO's executive committee does not recognize Resolution 242 (Israel's right to exist within secured borders), nor does it call for a complete end to terrorists tactics, but it does call for a 'cease-fire' and for negotiations between Israel, the U.S. and the PLO.

The PLO's legal explanation for not recognizing Israel is that "only a state can recognize a state," but the six-point plan is definitely a 180 degree turn when compared to the PLO's former charter. But the Israelis seem unlikely to accept the plan.

Instead, the Israelis want to destroy their 'mortal enemy.' "If the PLO recognizes Israel, and gives up terrorism, (sic) then the PLO would cease to be the PLO. It would be a political organization," said Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan. What Dayan fails to realize is that the PLO is a political organization with a defined goal, and with a redefined charter.

"Israeli's mistake is that it views the PLO issue in absolute idealistic terms. Politics is the art of bargaining, and Israel's policy of damning the PLO to eternity (what Jackson called the 'persecution complex') indicates the government's failure to differentiate between ideology and the market aspects of the problem," according to a political science professor at Tel Aviv University. In this respect, one can understand why some view the PLO as the new underdogs in the Middle East.

Blacks have been pushed into the center stage on international diplomacy by the political martyrdom of Andrew Young. Jackson's controversial delegation not only reaped the publicity the PLO sought, but it also has divided black leaders, and Jackson has placed his career on the line just as Dr. Martin Luther King did when he spoke out against the Vietnam War in 1968.

Amazingly, King was correct in his condemnation of the Vietnam War, and the repercussions of that war still affect the U.S. today. Jackson, like King, is ahead of his time, and when America finally realizes that he and Young were right, we'll say it was obvious all along.

Students need $

By LANCE ROBERTS

A recent Monday was payday for 1200-1500 James Madison University students, the first time many had seen any revenue since they started work during the final week of August.

To wait a month and a half, and a month during the remainder of each semester to get paid pushes most students to budgeting tactics they should not have to consider.

The College Work Study Program (CWSP) allows students to work up to 15 hours per week, while the Ten-hour Work Program gives students an opportunity to work up to ten hours per week. These programs are available so students needing financial assistance can earn money to supplement their budgets.

The Student Government Association has a bill in committee that would seek to change the pay period from monthly to twice a month.

If approved by the committee and passed by the student senate, the bill would have to be approved by the JMU administration.

This money is needed by the students and having to wait such a long time to get paid is unfair. And with students often having no choice in accepting the state job, since they need the income, coupled with the reality of applicants outnumbering available jobs; the state can take the attitude that if students can find better employment elsewhere, let them.

Maybe the students should go elsewhere. The pay for 10-hour and CWSP students is $2.50 per hour in the fall and $2.65 in the spring, which is not even minimum wage. If the state had to replace all the students with part-time employees, they would have to pay more money more often if the schools expected the part-timers to stay for any length of time.

Students are an inexpensive, accessible and willing work force to be tapped. But to discourage them by requiring that they wait for paychecks they have worked for, while full-time employees are paid twice a month borders on being discriminatory.

Passage of the twice-a-month paycheck faces some serious obstacles, however.

According to the payroll office, additional staff members would have to be added to their department and probably others with large student staffs, like food services and athletics.

The Payroll office contends it would need another full-time worker to handle the doubled work load each month, and a new larger office as there would not be adequate space for the additional full-time person in the present space.

There is another stumbling block. Last year, the General Assembly of Virginia passed a law allowing institutions to pay their part-time employees once a month.

Hopefully, the state and the JMU administration will see the validity of this request. It is not an outrageous demand but an appeal for equality.

Granted, full-time employees have greater financial responsibilities than students. But students have bills to pay too.

Apparently no one ever took that into consideration. Hopefully they will now.

WMRA staff accused of being 'childish'

To the editor:

The dictionary defines communication as "free interchange, as of thoughts and ideas." We communicate constantly throughout our lives and are bombarded by the various media day in and day out. James Madison University offers a degree in this ever-expanding field. WMRA, a part of JMU's Communication Arts department, is a public radio station, its function being to inform and to entertain—to communicate.

How ironic, then, that this station finds it so difficult to communicate effectively with its own staff.

We, the undersigned, have been intimately involved with the daily operation of WMRA in differing capacities for varying lengths of time. Although we are grateful for having had access to WMRA's generally good facilities, there is a pervasive feeling that we have been cheated out of the best possible education and hands-on technical experience.

Furthermore, we allege that the public has been robbed of the most efficient programming and subsequent entertainment value WMRA could offer.

The reasons for these unfortunate events comes down to the often childish attitudes of some of the WMRA professional staff. Simple differences in taste and opinion were either not tolerated or were incorrectly dealt with during our stay with the station.

Nasty memorandums, for example, were frequently placed by certain staff members in station mailboxes of student workers who were deemed "undesirable." The individuals involved were rarely consulted regarding their side of the story. This second-hand communication tactic led to rumors that most often brought down the morale of the entire station.

Furthermore, if a student was really at odds with the professional staff, other more extreme tactics were employed. These included total non-cooperation and at times outright censorship. On a few occasions work-study scholarships were taken away to meet whatever ends the administration desired.

Budgetary reasons were almost always cited as the excuse, although later the scholarships would most often be assigned to other individuals more to the liking of certain professional staff members.

The authors of this letter are no longer connected with WMRA, but we believe that the station could be a great asset to both the community and the University. However, to realize its full potential, WMRA must assume more responsible management—it must learn to put aside petty differences and find more equitable means of dealing with real problems.

Editor's note:

WMRA station manager Donald Lanham replied to the above letter:

"I will let this letter stand on its merits and I will let WMRA do the same. We invite any further investigatory processes that these individuals deem necessary. I would remind the student populace of James Madison University that we are no longer licensed as merely a University station. We have to meet the needs of all of our listening public, not just students. We program toward the student in the evening hours with album-oriented rock and at this time that's all we intend to program toward the student population."

Parking situation frustrating

By TIM MAUPIN

In regards to the parking situation at James Madison University, my sentiments are best expressed in the following maneuver. And nothing irritates me more than the security force and its attempt to deal with the situation. It seems more and more obvious to me that the true purpose behind the ticketing of the security force is not to regulate parking, but to obtain as much money from the student body as possible in a most trivial manner. My own experiences, as well as those of others, are supportive of this. I received my first university ticket of the semester during the second weekend of school at which time I me wonder about the university cops. Are they just plain bored? Do they have nothing better to do at four in the morning? Evidently not. Or is it simply having to be on duty while the rest of the world is in bed? But seriously folks, who is going to be searching for a place to park their car at 4:10 in the morning? It seems that JMU officers, for some odd reason, are really only capable of handing out parking tickets, which they do quite well. But that's not surprising considering that they practice at it 24 hours a day. But what if there was a real emergency on campus? How would the security force respond? ... by issuing a ticket?

If this sounds ridiculous, then perhaps an experience I had in February of last semester will throw it all into some kind of perspective. Over a period of three days, I received four parking tickets for illegally parking along a yellow curb in the H lot. There was six inches of snow on the ground when I parked my car and another ten inches accumulated before the storm had ended. I had no way of moving my car, but evidently this made no difference with the security force. I suppose I could have been out with a snowshovel shoveling away until I found a curb that's not yellow. Only security would expect that! I protested all of the tickets, and yet only two of them were voided.

In light of these experiences, I have to believe that money is the primary motive for contemptable ticketing of this sort.

There is one final complaint. As if students are not already overburdened with outrageous fees and expenses, those of us who drive are forced to stake out another $8 to obtain a parking permit. Many of us who live on the western edge of campus in the bluestone area are forced to park our vehicles nearly a half mile away in the X parking lot on the eastern edge of campus. Perhaps security and the administration need to be reminded that we, the students, pay the bills and salaries around here; and this is our home. Yet we are not even allowed to park in the lots adjacent to our dorms. I wish someone would explain to me the logic behind this.

I have a solution to all this. Perhaps we should form an organization and call ourselves the Student Alliance for Sensible Parking Regulations (SASPR) with the intent of sabotaging the security office to destroy all ticketing pads, or perhaps we should all refuse to pay fines, or perhaps we should just sit back and take it like we always do.

Who is going to be searching for a place to park at 4:10?

was parked in H lot located behind Ashby Hall. I would not have received this ticket if not for the incompetence of security personnel in dealing with a growing number of students driving automobiles. Consequently, I was unable to get a parking permit simply because there were not enough available for those needing them. As a result, I was first forced to find a temporary place to park off campus. Anyone who is familiar with the City of Harrisonburg will know that there is no such thing. Extending in all directions beyond campus are streets lined with "NO PARKING" signs or various other restrictive notices. There simply is no place to park legally.

This placed me in quite a predicament, and left me with the choice of being ticketed by the city police or by the campus police. I was beginning to wonder if the folks in security expected me to miraculously make my car disappear. Unfortunately, I am not so resourceful; at least, not as resourceful as they are in contriving ways in which to levy fines upon students.

My previous experiences with the campus police convinced me to take my chances with the city police; however, I found that they too are quite proficient at writing parking tickets. This left me with but one dreaded alternative: to park on campus. As expected I received a parking ticket for parking in the H lot which is normally reserved for the teaching staff.

Receiving this ticket was disgusting enough, but the real clincher is the fact that the ticket was issued at 4:10 a.m. It makes

Castoffs in the end zone

To the editor:

I have been present at two home football games and also witnessed the team's devastating defeat at The University of Virginia. I have also witnessed the Royal Dukes marching band "winning" the half time events. They perform consistently in a highly musical and exciting manner in their role as half-time entertainment. However, as an organization boosting spectator's spirit and enthusiasm, the band falls short of its mark through no fault of its own.

To compare our band's seating situation, tune in any Saturday afternoon televised collegiate football game and see where the band is situated—down front in the student cheering section and not in the end zone like cast-offs (and the Royal Dukes). By the way, the same comparison applies to basketball pep bands. For three years I was assistant marching band director at a university in Texas where they take both football and marching bands very seriously. That band, like most others in the "big time," had special short "cheer" arrangements which the crowd would immediately join in with great zeal.

I know that, because of our limited seating capacity, the athletic department wants to get as much monetary return as they can for the permanent seating. However, effective seating of the band at "little" schools like Michigan and Michigan State is the assurance of a 30-yard-line seat.

As long as I've ascended the "soap box," as composer of the Dukes' fight song, it might help to have the game announcer tell the spectators where in the program the words can be found and urge them to sing along with the band. It was interesting to note that the animated scoreboard at UVA displayed the words to the Grand Old Song every time it was sung; and we certainly heard it more times than we would have liked last Saturday.

If we're to "Go for the Gold," let's have the Royal Dukes go with us.

SGA choice

To the editor:

It seems to me that our Student Government Association president and chairperson pro tempore place little importance upon the office of parliamentarian, which receives an SGA-funded scholarship of $400 a year. Without desire to embarrass or besmirch the name of our newly-appointed parliamentarian, I would like to say that it bothers me about the appointment of a freshman over a highly qualified senior with two years experience in the SGA senate. Perhaps our president and pro tempore do not realize that the parliamentarian is vital in the smooth operation of senate proceedings. Without a working understanding of parliamentary procedure, this vital position diminishes in importance. To me, it does not appear that logic or foresight were used in choosing this position this year.

SALT II: to ratify or not to ratify?

Pros and cons of controversial treaty examined at college conference

By VANCE RICHARDSON

Holding a glass of water up for the audience to see, U.S. Senator Gary Hart (D-Col.) said his debate opponent, U.S. Senator William Cohen (R-Maine), "sees this glass as half empty; I see it as half full."

'Endeavor of considerable merit...'

Hart's comment was representative of the two senators' opposing perspectives regarding the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) pending in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Hart and Cohen were among the many leading experts and noted scholars assembled for the Conference on the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty at Hampden-Sydney College near Farmville, Va.

Delegates representing colleges and universities from Idaho, South Dakota, South Carolina, Massachusetts, Maryland, Ohio, New York, and Virginia gathered for three days of discussion and speeches on the proposed treaty.

(Two senior political science majors here, Richard Stevens and this reporter, represented James Madison University at the conference held Thursday through Saturday.)

THE KEYNOTE address was delivered by the honorable McGeorge Bundy, a former chairman of the Ford Foundation and national security adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

Bundy, a "firm supporter of the SALT II Treaty," presented questions to be weighed in determining one's position regarding SALT II. The basic question that should be addressed is whether on balance this treaty is good or bad for the security of the U.S., he said. A slightly different way of judging the treaty, he said, is to ask if it "helps or hurts our effort to maintain a stable strategic balance between ourselves and the Soviet Union."

Bundy said the treaty puts a ceiling, albeit a high one, on the forces available to the Soviet Union. The thousands of thermonuclear warheads already available to both sides make for a "durable strategic stalemate," and the treaty helps to codify and solidify that stability, he said.

Bundy added that if there is any imbalance in the level of concessions made by each side over the seven years of negotiation, "It tilts in our favor."

An opposing viewpoint was presented by Dr. Richard Pipes, a member of the Committee on the Present Danger and the Council on Foreign Relations.

PIPES ARGUED that the Soviet Union does not accept the basic premise that guides American nuclear strategy—Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD). This theory is based on the belief that neither side would launch a first-strike nuclear attack against the other for fear of a retaliatory strike.

The Soviets have developed a theory that "principles of warfare remain intact" with nuclear weapons. Pipes asserted, MAD is ignored by the Russian military strategists who believe the Soviet Union can come out ahead of the United States in the event of nuclear war, he said.

This doesn't mean the Soviets are planning for or looking forward to nuclear exchange, Pipes said; the Soviets are simply "acting like prudent men, preparing for contingency of war."

The Soviets know that nuclear weapons will be a decisive factor if "things get out of control" and nuclear war does occur, so they build their strategy around nuclear weapons, according to Pipes. The Soviets place great importance on first-strike, or pre-emptive war. Although the Soviets believe a nuclear war could last for months, the first few hours will be most decisive, Pipes said.

"THE TREATY allows the Russians so preponderant a force that I believe a Russian first-strike is feasible," Pipes concluded. "I could personally live with SALT II if passed as is, but I don't see any reason to accept this treaty. There are too many inequities in this treaty; it ties our hands while the balance of power is shifting to their side."

George Ashworth, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, called SALT II an "endeavor of considerable merit" that should be ratified.

'...inherent inequities in the agreement'

ASHWORTH asked delegates to consider "a world with SALT and a world without SALT."

Without SALT II the Soviet Union is capable of significantly increasing their number of warheads, our intelligence collection is undermined, and other arms accords will be jeopardized, according to Ashworth.

With SALT II the U.S. can limit the growth of Soviet nuclear weaponry, better verify Soviet activities, open the door to other arms control agreements, and put NATO in a stronger position for the future, Ashworth said.

Calling SALT II "the centerpiece of our relationship with the Soviet Union," Ashworth said a combination of SALT II and new defense programs will lead to a more secure United States in the years ahead. It's "the only rational choice," he said.

THE CONCLUDING session of the Hampden-Sydney conference featured a debate between Senators Cohen and Hart, both of whom serve on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

With SALT II, U.S. security is enhanced, Hart said; without it, security is diminished. Without SALT II there is potential for an unlimited arms race, very serious problems verifying Soviet activities, and no chance for a balanced budget in the 1980's, according to the senator from Colorado.

Cohen countered by saying "we are involved in an arms build-up and we call it arms control." SALT II is not an arms limitation treaty, he alleged, because it does not significantly reduce nuclear weapons. There are "dangerous precedents" and "inherent inequities in the agreement itself," he said.

All those favoring ratification of the treaty agreed that there must also be an increase in defense expenditures. Bundy called for a "prudent increase—perhaps four percent in real terms."

Everyone seemed to agree that no matter what happens with SALT II, the Soviet Union is not likely to become a good friend of the United States. "They're an adversary, and it's an adversary relationship," commented Ashworth. "We're not relying on trust of the Soviet Union."
