SCHEV approves proposal for nursing program here

By KRIS CARLSON

A baccalaureate nursing program for James Madison University has been approved by the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia.

JMU asked SCHEV in December 1978 to reconsider the proposal, which it had rejected several times.

The program, approved by SCHEV in March, must now be approved by the State Board of Nursing, according to Dr. Thomas Stanton, vice president for academic affairs.

While the SCHEV approval allows JMU to give a nursing degree, State Board approval "of the substantive content" of the program is now needed, Stanton said.

The next step will be to hire a director for the nursing school, since it will be the director who will draw up the proposal for the nursing program to be submitted to the state board, he said.

"A lot depends on the philosophy of the individual director," regarding drawing up the proposal for the nursing program, Stanton said.

JMU is awaiting an answer to an offer made to a woman who is currently the dean of the school of nursing at a major university east of the Mississippi, according to Stanton.

The doctor's name is being withheld since she does not want her current employer to know she is considering the JMU offer.

JMU has interviewed one other candidate this spring and is still advertising in such national magazines as the professional nursing magazine and the "Chronicle for Higher Education" for persons interested in the position of director.

The target date for students to enter the new school of nursing, if it is approved by the state board, is September 1980, Stanton said. To enter, students will have to be at least their junior year and have completed the two-year pre-nursing program which already exists here, he said.

Currently, students taking pre-nursing courses at JMU transfer after their second year here to a college or university that offers a nursing degree. With the new program, student would stay here instead of transferring, according to Stanton.

In fact, it was on this basis that JMU appealed to SCHEV to reconsider its rejection of a nursing program here: when students leave the Shenandoah Valley to attend nursing schools elsewhere, they seldom return to the area, Stanton said, adding that JMU established this trend in a feasibility study done in the fall of 1976 to demonstrate to SCHEV the need for nurses in this geographic area.

Interestingly enough, the JMU nursing program was approved by the State Board of Nursing in January 1977, but under the condition that the program be started by September 1977, according to Stanton.

However, SCHEV rejected the program in March 1977, so that the state board approval expired after September. The program was rejected on the basis of the study "Health Manpower Study of Registered Nurses," which was made by SCHEV's advisory committee. The report goes to Carrier.

JMU enrollment: 10,000 in 1990s

By PATTI TULLY

James Madison University should pursue "gradual and orderly enrollment increases, resulting in a total headcount of approximately 10,000 students between 1989-90 and 1991-92."

That recommendation was accepted Friday by the Planning and Development Commission from two of its subcommittee reports—one on optimum enrollment and the other on support facilities.

The studies on these topics and subsequent reports were made in response to a request by University President Ronald Carrier last October that the future growth potential of the university be studied by the commission during the 1978-79 term.

The committee on optimum enrollment does not envision any significant change in "general complexion" of JMU as a result of increasing enrollment to 10,000, the committee report read.

However, the report noted that such an enrollment increase would not be "optimum" but rather desirable for the 1989 time period. In addition, the feasibility of an enrollment increase in enrollment would be determined by several criteria.

In consideration of the optimum enrollment committee's recommendation, the committee on support facilities made suggestions that both on and off campus housing, library and academic space, dining facilities and parking would have to be increased to accommodate an enrollment of 10,000 students.

However, they also suggested that beyond present needs the only additional recreational facility that might be needed would be another swimming pool, and that there would be no need to increase health facilities.

The report by the committee on optimum enrollment included several criteria upon which they suggested the feasibility of their proposed enrollment increase be based.

First, the availability of support facilities would have to be considered. This would include educational and general (classrooms, laboratories, faculty offices, library space etc.) and auxiliary space (student housing, dining facilities, student union, health and auxiliary space).
SGA: Budget cuts proposed for student groups

By BRUCE OSBORNE
The proposed student government Association’s finance committee recommended an increase in student organization budgets Thursday night.

While the SGA denied the request, but some tentative bottom line figures were discussed. The University Program Board budget was tentatively cut from $39,859 to $38,359, according to Jeff Bollander, a member of the committee and treasurer-elect of the SGA.

The SGA wouldn’t be punished for improving campus entertainment, according to Jeff Bollander, who said the calendar is the “largest, most widely used publication on campus.”

The finance committee was scheduled to meet again Monday night to vote on the budgets. Bottom line figures will then be voted on by the SGA as a whole. If approved, these figures will be announced to the organizations, which will have to make any necessary budget revisions.

The SGA’s budget is $30,760, according to John Vogt, The Breeze’s business manager, to find out if these figures were accurate before making any final decisions.

A $2000 cut also was recommended for The Breeze’s scholarships and professional services allocations. The SGA’s budget is $30,760, an increase of $5,000 over this year’s operating budget, but $5,000 of this increase would be used to cover a long-term loan program for students.

Bolander recommended cutting $1,000 from the $5,000 allocated to the SGA calendar. This suggestion brought a quick response from Martin, who said the calendar is the "largest, most widely used publication on campus."

‘80s to bring conservatism
Peer pressure predicted leading cause

By CINDY ELMORE

Peer pressure will lead to a more conservative lifestyle and an atmosphere appropriate to study at James Madison University, the management subcommittee said.

"We see students becoming more serious because of the reassessment of traditional academic disciplines," Blaker Bolling, management subcommittee chairman said. "We see a need for increased student service, but, realistically, the state legislature is going to be reluctant to allocate resources to higher education."

Residence hall advisers must be increased, in addition to the residence halls. A need for increased demands was made. At least 30-50 students to meet increased demands was made. In addition, R.A.'s will need further training to meet the special needs of subgroups within residence halls.

Also recommended were increased use of student surveys to determine trends; additional areas provided throughout the campus "conducive to good study habits," and more recreational facilities and quality of life.

"There should be a decrease in activities available during the week and an increase of available activities on the weekend," Bolling said, adding that this will be due to an increased concern for increased educational responsibilities.

The committee sees more future interest in residence halls for plan dorm social activities.

Unions restrict employees
CEAFU supports educators, spokesman says

By PATTI TULLY

Compulsory unionism forces employees to support unions whether they want to or not, if employees refuse to support their unions then they lose their jobs, according to a representative of Concerned Educators Against Forced Unionism who spoke to members of the James Madison University Young Americans for Freedom Wednesday night.

CEAFU, a division of the National Right to Work Committee, was set up to defeat compulsory unionism in the educational system and to allow educators to make their own decisions as to whether or not they will support unions, Edward Remington said.

CEAFU is pushing for the passage of Right to Work Laws in all 50 states, Remington said. The laws make it possible for employees to refuse to join unions without placing their jobs in jeopardy, he said. So far, 20 states have adopted Right to Work Laws, Remington said.

In states which do not have Right to Work Laws, unions use three tactics to force employees to support them.

The first is the closed shop, which although it has now been outlawed is still used by some unions, Remington said. The closed shop requires that newly hired employees join the union before they are hired.

The second tactic is the agency shop which requires the newly hired employee to join the union after a specified period of time. If the employee does not join within that time period, then he or she is fired, Remington said.

The third tactic is the open shop, which requires employees to be independent of the union, without having to pay dues, and without the fear that they will lose their jobs, Remington said.

Another problem with the dues collector by unions is that it is not used exclusively for collective bargaining, Remington said. In fact, only about 11 percent of union dues is used for collective bargaining, he said.

Unions use the remaining money to pay salaries of union officials, and for contributions to political candidates, Edward Remington says.

The CEAFU is an employee organization, Remington said. "Our main purpose is to give the employee the right to make his own decision as to whether he will support a union or not," he said.

Auditions held for Madisonians

Auditions for the Madisonians will be held on Sunday, April 22, at 10 a.m. in DM 209 of James Madison University's Duke Fine Arts Center.

Anyone interested in auditioning for the group should be prepared to sing one up-tempo show or jazz song and to learn a short dance routine. All music should be memorized.

Enrollment

The report indicated that the willingness of the commonwealth to fund educational and general constructions, and the university's ability to assume additional debts to construct auxiliary facilities need to be given careful consideration. Another important criteria would be availability or non-availability of additional academic programs, important to maintaining a large applicant pool. Development of new graduate programs would also be important in determining whether the university can possibly reach an enrollment of 10,000.

A third criteria would involve the impact of the recommended growth on the local community. One particular area of concern is that the community might not be able to accommodate increasing numbers of students in terms of housing.

However, the committee indicated that the university, within certain limits, should be able to increase enrollment without any major negative impact on the community, provided further growth is accomplished gradually.

Another consideration is that if JMU pursues its State Council of Higher Education in Virginia approved enrollments through 1990, which are considerably less than 10,000, it would lose 3.2 percent of the current "market share" of students among the commonwealth's institutions. In order to maintain its current "market share" of students, JMU would need to increase enrollment to approximately 10,000 by 1990. The committee concluded that JMU could reach an enrollment of approximately 10,000 by 1990 by maintaining essentially the same enrollment growth which occurred between 1975-79, that is an addition of 150 students each year.

Another criteria which favors increased enrollment is that by growing, the university would be able to establish a limited number of new faculty positions, which would provide some degree of flexibility in staffing.

This is necessary, the report said, if the school is to continue to attract young faculty, and also to respond to shifts in program interest on the part of students. A final consideration that must be made is the increasing specialization of JMU's immediate service area including: Rockingham, Augusta, Shenandoah, and Page counties, in addition to the cities of Harrisonburg, Staunton and Waynesboro, the report said.

With growth patterns in the area expected to continue through the year 2000, the availability of students from the region is likely to continue to increase correspondingly according to the report. The committee concluded that this factor alone suggests that some increase in capacity will be necessary unless JMU is to curtail service to other regions of the state, which it does not intend to do.

In addition, the possibility of a major industrial complex locating in Rockingham County indicates that prospects for increasing development in the area are strong, the report said.

In considering housing needs for an enrollment of 10,000 students, the committee said, the university would need to maintain its current housing policies, which the committee regards as:

- (1) Students attending the university and living in university operated housing are guaranteed housing until graduation.
- (2) Freshman are required to live on campus or with a member of their immediate family.

Approximately 50 percent of all students have returned to university housing for the past five or six years, according to the report, and assuming that the trend continues constant, the need for additional housing is apparent.

In order to prepare the community for the possible increased needs in off-campus housing, the committee suggested that the university must assume an active role in encouraging development, and make area business people aware of the projected demands for housing.

In terms of needed library space, the committee said, that 300 additional square feet would be needed to meet the minimum library space for an enrollment of 10,000. In addition 8.3 percent more classroom space would be needed for that number of students.

An enrollment increase to 10,000 would also require that additional institutional space be provided, the report said. The committee suggested a central support building that would provide additional space for administrative and production functions.

A final conclusion made by the committee on support facilities was that for every three additional students an enrollment of 9,000, one additional parking space would be needed. The committee also suggested that extra parking be provided for concerts, football and basketball games.

High jinks in the Old South:

‘Tartuffe’ opens tonight in Latimer-Shaeffer

By DWAYNE VANCEY

When "Tartuffe" opens tonight in Latimer-Shaeffer Theatre, it will be a far different show from the one Moliere originally had in mind.

But despite that, director Alan Lyndrup says the French dramatist would be pleased.

Moliere first wrote the play as a political satire aimed at the historical Tartuffe. Originally banned by the church for its strong anti-clerical views, Moliere rewrote it, softening the politics and emphasizing the comedy.

Lyndrup has played down the theme of religious hypocrisy even further, but that’s not all he has tinkered with. He has pulled the play out of 18th century France and set it down squarely in the ante-bellum South.

With literary sleight-of-hand, King Louis XIV has been dropped in favor of a governor, and Normandy has been turned into Tennessee.

"Tartuffe" becomes the means by which Orgon can not only gain control over his household, but also tyrannize it.

"But Tartuffe is a bad actor, though, because he hasn’t fooled anybody else’’ with his fake piety," said Lyndrup. And so the characters spend the rest of the play attempting to rid themselves of Tartuffe, with, of course, a few subplots to complicate the action.

When first performed, the play revolutionized comedy. "Before comedy was silliness - farce at its lowest level," he said. "What Moliere did was write a comedy of the intellect."

Besides Tartuffe and Orgon, other cast members include: Elmire, Orgon’s young second wife (Mary Ruberry), daughter Marianne (Doreen Murray), son Thomas (John Craig), step-brother Cleante (Steve Snyder) who provides "the voice of reason," Orgon’s mother (Jackie Belt), two maids (Angela Adkins and Frances O’Donnell), Mr. Loyal (Stan Johnson), Marianne’s fiancé (Mark Logan), Charles Webb (doublecast) and an officer of the law (Aaron Cross).

"Tartuffe" runs Tuesday through Sunday in Latimer-Shaeffer Theatre at 8 p.m.
THE BACKYARD of the Carrier's house boasts a multi-level, bricked-in terrace with a pool and poolhouse, complete with kitchen. Here, Mrs. Carrier shows where steps will eventually lead from the balcony to the terrace.

AN INSIDER LOOKING OUT from behind the imposing brick wall that surrounds the house, which is 17-foot high in some places. This is the pedestrian front entrance to the Carrier grounds.

By JULIE SUMMERS

When James Madison University President Ronald Carrier and his wife Edith came here in 1971, the university promised them a home away from campus.

Until then, the Hillcrest home would have to do.

Their new home of two years has solved all the problems.

Oak View, situated off Port Republic Road, has a large formal living room, a large downstairs den, a large pool, a large formal dining room, a large kitchen and a large back yard—all perfect for the Carriers' large-scale entertaining.

The home, made available to the university and ultimately to the Carriers by Mrs. Marvin Poster, remains much in the same way as when the Posters lived here. Mrs. Carrier has given it her own personal touches, but most all of the furniture and decorating pieces are just as Mrs. Poster left it.

The contemporary home is surrounded by a curving wall, similar to the one surrounding Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's home in Charlottesville. In some places, the wall is as high as 17 feet.

The entrance foyer has an indoor garden and leads into the living room where Mrs. Carrier made one major change—moved the furniture out.

Mrs. Carrier felt that the living room walls, papered with blue velvet and brocade, did not lend itself to modern red leather furniture that Mrs. Poster had placed in the room. So, Mrs. Carrier moved it to one of the dens and brought in her own furniture.

The red furniture now blends well with the black and white modern den and the formal brocade arm chairs and grand piano fit the formal living room.

Some family members have individual areas of the home.

Twelve-year-old Jenninene, the last Carrier child to live at home, has her baton twirling trophies and doll collection on display near her room and Dr. Carrier has his baseball glove and ball in his office.

The family seems to spend much of their time in the modern den where there's a TV, magazines and the comfortable red leather furniture.

That is, when the family is all there. Dr. Carrier is often out of town or working quite late, son Micheal lives in Richmond, daughter Linda is a sophomore at the University of Virginia, and daughter Jenninene takes her mother off to places like Mannasas, Va. for twirling competitions.

The Carrier home still tries to revolve around the family. Linda's room is just how she left it so weekends at home are really 'at home.' Mrs. Carrier prepares all the meals and everybody sits around the kitchen table for dinner.

The kitchen is perhaps the most down-to-earth room in the house since much of Mrs. Poster's taste seems to have run towards the luxurious and ornate.

Mrs. Carrier's bathroom has a sunken tub beside a full window next to the garden. One wall is all mirrors and there are small statuettes around the tub.

There is another mirrored wall in the downstairs den and the wall paper is silver with red graphic designs.

From the vaulted ceiling in the upstairs den hangs a modern light fixture of large hanging balls. The wall paper is a zebra print.

Much of the artwork in the Carrier home, ranging from modern to ancient Oriental, is either donated by Mrs. Poster or from the university collection compiled by curator Horace Burr.

There are Rembrandt's, Picasso's and other valuable works by modern artists throughout the house.

Outside, a bricked walk-way leads to the patio, the pool and the clubhouse. The landscaped yard, pool and tennis court are provide facilities for the Carrier's outdoor entertaining.

They plan to have the Student Senate there this month for an outdoor dinner, the Faculty Senate later in the month, the Irish ambassador was last month, and who knows for next month. "We definitely have a better time out here," Mrs. Carrier says with a smile.
Baseball Dukes sweep W&M pair

Lorenzo Bundy drove home eight runs and James Madison's pitching held William and Mary to just one run all afternoon Saturday as the Dukes swept a doubleheader from the Indians.

JMU's Mark Dacko allowed just six hits in the 12-1 opener. He struck out nine and walked one before leaving the bases full in the fourth. Three hits, three walks and a sacrifice fly accounted for three JMU runs in the fifth. Tom Boocock, Krowiak and Bundy each collected RBIs in the inning.

Designated hitter Mike Esles led off the sixth with a double and was driven in by Russ Dickerson's double. Bob Sica singled, bringing in pinch-runner Woody Jackson. Bundy picked up his third RBI of the first game scoring Sica, and Mike Cravotta drove in a pair of runs with his single. Dacko lowered his earned run average to 2.04 over 39 2-3 innings.

The Dukes pounded out 29 hits in what was well out of reach. The Dukes outscored the Indians 12-1 and 13-3.

This time, however, the fifth frame was scoreless. Sica reached on a walk to lead off the first and scored when Joe Bono walked with the bases loaded. Bundy drove in all three runs in the second with his sixth home run of the season. Bundy connected on Brian Moore's first pitch and slammed the homer to right. JMU collected four runs in the third, three in the fourth and another in the sixth in shutting out the Indians.

The win raised JMU's record to 22-7 overall, the sixth consecutive season that Brad Babcock's Dukes have won at least 20 games. The twin bill sweep also upped the Dukes' Eastern College Athletic Conference to 7-3. William and Mary fell to 7-19.

JMU collected four runs in the fifth, six in the sixth and nine in the seventh that helped W&M scored its lone run. Three hits, three walks and a sacrifice fly accounted for four above the minimum. Thirty hits and faced 19 batters, as the Indians scored in every inning.

By that point, the game was well out of reach. The Dukes outscored the Indians 7-0 and 9-2.

The win raised JMU's Eastern College Athletic Conference to 7-3. William and Mary fell to 7-19.

The Dukes will host Virginia Tech today at 3 p.m.

Duchesses sign 5-7 forward

Judy Baumgardner, a 5'7" forward from Harrisburg, Pa., has signed a women's basketball scholarship at James Madison University.

Baumgardner averaged 15.1 points a game as a point guard last season at Central Dauphin High School. She has been named to the Central Pennsylvania Roundball Classic. Baumgardner was also named one of the Harrisburg area's top 15 women's basketball players this year by the Harrisburg Patriot-News.

"Judy is a very, very smart player," said JMU head basketball coach Betty Jaynes. "Her ball handling skills are also very good." "I think Judy will be an exceptional passer," JMU assistant coach Pam Wiegardt said. "She's very quick and should make a very good defensive player. Her strength, though, is in her passing ability."

Baumgardner is also a member of the Central Dauphin tennis and softball teams. She has been a three-year starter on the softball team and last year was named the softball team's most valuable player. Baumgardner is the second player to sign a basketball scholarship at JMU this year. Earlier Jaynes announced the signing of Lori Marsden, a 5'9" forward from Rockville, Md.

"WHEN YOU TEST-DRIVE
A FRONT-WHEEL DRIVE AUTOMOBILE
SAVE IT FOR A RAINY DAY"

An Interview With Bill Rule
President of Rule, Inc.
Staunton, Virginia

Why so smart? RULE: No, but front-wheel drive cars show how good a car can really be. In fair weather nearly every car is good; but in rain, snow, or a strong crosswind, it's a different story. That's the time to try a Front Drive. If you're a driver who really wants a car to slip on sherry road, you're in for a surprise. The engine weight over the drive wheels gives excellent traction on rain, ice, and snow. The center of gravity is closer to the front; the car is more stable in crosswinds. And up to this point import cars have led in the Front Drive concept.

Does something depend on front wheel drive? RULE: Yes, it is the most popular car since we started selling them in 1976. It's really good looking. And it has a very simple engine concept called CVCC (or Controlled Vortex Combustion Chamber). Sound complicated? Not at all. It uses regular gas or any other gasoline without requiring a complicated catalytic converter. Also front-wheel drive. And they were right, because it is the most successful import ever introduced. They made the interior and the car more comfortable and relaxed. It is the ultimate in luxury.

Did yours run on regular gas and saved money? RULE: Yes, it's the most popular car since we started selling them in 1976. It runs on regular gas and saved money. It is really good looking. And it has a very simple engine concept called CVCC (or Controlled Vortex Combustion Chamber). Sound complicated? Not at all. It uses regular gas or any other gasoline without requiring a complicated catalytic converter. That's really important today. This CVCC engine was invented by Dr. Sodiro Honda, the truly great automotive genius of our time. Honda will go down in automotive history with the likes of Henry Ford, Ferdinand Porsche and Harvey Firestone. Incidentally, all Honda automobiles are front-wheel drive—Honda would not think of building them any other way.

Thank you. RULE: It was clever of you to photo- shop this with a raincoat and umbrella. I guess that kind of thing helps publicize our front-wheel drive cars.

Guestspot: ‘Make it count while you have it’

To the editor:

Ah, but time marches on. And old empires crumble, It’s life’s unrelenting way. To keep us all humble.

Yet I can’t help but thinking, What a lamentable thing! To be punching a time clock. The Ex-Campus King.

Now I am past graduation, And there’s no more time for play. What with confounding inflation, And taxes to pay.

So I slave at my desk, With my quills to meet, And my mortgage loans, Backache moans, And four hours sleep.

All these woes piled upon me, It seems so easy to say, That compared to this, Campus life was soufflé! So here’s a word from a veteran, To all you now campus chile. Make it count while you have it. “Cause it’s not yours to keep.

The world’s mandates are plain. And the truth is explicit. There is no going back. But God knows I miss it!

Michael Aanes.

To the editor:

Dr. Ray Somner’s recently released temporary school slogan “GO FOR THE GOLD” will not adequately motivate students.

The slogan should read “LET’S SAVE THE GOLD”. This more aptly identifies the situation here at James Madison.

The Breeze welcomes letters and editorials regarding issues relevant to James Madison University students, faculty and staff. All letters and editorials are subject to editing and must include the author’s name, address and telephone number, and must be typed. Unsigned letters and editorials will not be used. Letters and editorials should be addressed to the Editorial Editor in care of The Breeze, Wine-Price Building.

To the editor:

In response to your response to my response to The Breeze’s response to Darrell Pile’s actions, I quote Jim Watkins, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Student Government Association: “The SGA does not buy subscriptions for the student body. We fund The Breeze to supplement them so that they can run a newspaper for the students of this campus. There is no written agreement between the SGA and The Breeze about subscriptions for students and no written agreement requiring The Breeze to produce any specific number of copies.” In any event, only 5,000 copies of each issue are printed for 8,000 students so there obviously cannot be subscriptions for “the entire student body.”

To the editor:

Madison. The situation I refer to is vandalism. Vending machines, wire fences, broken glass doors, bathroom designation signs and even the glass encasement on Warren University Union’s elevator have fallen prey to recent unnecessary acts of destruction.

I am ashamed and embarrassed when I pass “Gawkers Hill” and see litter strewn carelessly about.

I propose we clean up JMU for graduation so we can all show our parents and friends what a beautiful school we attend. Let’s save the gold.

Hillcrest accommodates wide range of ‘guests’

Hillcrest accommodates a wide range of ‘guests’

Former presidents’ home
houses offices, dining club

The ground was broken in 1913, and Hillcrest became the first official home for presidents of James Madison University. Julian Burruss was the first university president to occupy Hillcrest.

For the next 54 years, JMU's presidents would reside at Hillcrest. However, in 1977, President Ronald Carrier became the last president to live there. Carrier and his family moved to Oak View located in Forest Hills, and Hillcrest was converted to offices for University Relations, the Alumni Association and the Development Office. The basement became a faculty dining club and a kitchen workshop for Hotel-Restaurant Management students.

According to director of institutional research, William Jackameit, Hillcrest now has an insurable cash value of $146,146. Its contents are valued at $21,000, and the garage is estimated to be worth $7,171.

According to Fred Hilton, the assistant to the vice president of university relations, the decision to move the president's residence off-campus was made when the home in Forest Hills was given to the university foundation.

"The space in Hillcrest was needed for offices," Hilton said. "There was no real choice," Hilton said. According to Hilton, JMU was over-utilizing its academic spaces. When Hillcrest was first built, it was located on the edge of campus. However, as the school grew, the campus gradually enveloped the home, Hilton said.

According to Hilton, the advantages of having additional office space outweighed the disadvantages of moving the president off campus.

"We enjoyed being a part of what was going on on campus," Mrs. Carrier said. "It's still home," she said. "I put so much of myself into it."

According to Mrs. Carrier, when the family moved to Hillcrest, she completely redecorated the home. "Our new home affords us more privacy," she said. According to Mrs. Carrier, Oak View gives them more of an opportunity to entertain on an informal basis.

"Our home on campus was formal," she said. "We have students over to visit, and we are able to do more for them now."

After the president vacated Hillcrest, it was converted into offices. The basement of Hillcrest now functions as a faculty dining club where lunch is served. According to Hilton, minor alterations were made when turning the basement into a dining area. A kitchen workshop for Hotel-Restaurant Management students is also provided here. The garage serves as a Publications Office for the James Madison University News.

The first floor of Hillcrest functions as the alumni headquarters at JMU. "JMU needed a place where alumni could gather on campus," Hilton said. "It provides a central location where they can come to campus and feel welcome," Hancock said.

Hancock said he feels fortunate to work at Hillcrest. "I am walking in an area where important people have lived," said Hancock.

The office of University Relations is located on the second floor of Hillcrest.

"I couldn't be more pleased with where I work," said vice president of university relations, Dr. Ray Sonner. Sonner's secretary, Liz Knight, said, "We all love it here. It is close to things, yet it's not in the main stream."

According to Knight, the house has been very adaptable and very little real change has taken place. "Hillcrest is a multipurpose facility," said Hancock.
