President Miller Speaks

My attention has been directed to an event which, while not of great magnitude, is of much interest. This concern is the fact that the College is one of the few institutions of higher learning which has an open-door policy regarding the admission of students. This belief, as it is generally held, is that the College has a responsibility to provide an educational opportunity for all who qualify, regardless of their background or economic status. The College has maintained this policy for many years, and it is one that I feel strongly supports the principles of democracy and social mobility.

In recent years, however, there has been a growing concern about the quality of students admitted to the College. This is due in part to the increased competition for admission to higher education and the growing number of students who are seeking college education. The College has found it necessary to establish more selective admission criteria to ensure that our students are well prepared for college and that they will have the opportunity to succeed.

The administration of the College is committed to maintaining its open-door policy, but we also recognize the need to ensure that our students are prepared for success. We believe that our students should be academically prepared and that they should have the skills and abilities necessary to succeed in college and in their future careers. We are committed to providing our students with the best possible education and to ensuring that they are equipped with the skills and knowledge necessary to succeed.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize the importance of an open-door policy in higher education. We believe that all students should have the opportunity to attend college and that our institutions should be committed to providing this opportunity. At Madison College, we are committed to maintaining our open-door policy while also ensuring that our students are prepared for success. We believe that this is the best way to ensure that our students have the opportunity to achieve their full potential and to contribute to the success of our society.

Dr. J. Emmett Ikenberry, head of the division of natural sciences, delivered the Madison College Oration, a custom of the College. The subject of President Miller, Dr. Ikenberry agreed to serve in the position until an official appointment is made. President Miller said, "In fulfilling this trust, Dr. Ikenberry will execute all the functions of the position, with full authority to make the appropriate decisions." Dr. Ikenberry joined the College faculty in 1945. He received his B.A. degree from Bridgewater and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell University. He was appointed a divisional director in 1954.

Dean Percy H. Warren

Dear Editor,

Writing several years ago in a little publication entitled Scholarly Books in Print, the president of some mid-western college (Knox, I think) stated his view that it is as much a responsibility of a college to provide an excellent book store as to provide a library, even if the bookstore operates in the red. I feel that the responsibility is even greater in a town where big bookstores such as Anchor, Vintage, Meridian, and Jemagen just can not be found.

I should like to quote Mr. David Dches, Dean of the School of English and American Studies at the University of Sussex: "Now the buying of individual books for oneself is an important part of liberal education. . . . (English literature, p. 150). Speaking of paper-back bookstores, Dches comments, "The student is liberated from among an enormous variety of original texts and of critical works, and this itself is of the highest educational advantage. A work casually referred to in a lecture or noted in a bibliography might be found here, reasonably priced, and the student would be dull indeed who would not be tempted at least to take it up and look through it."

I am sure that many people

The Free Lance

Self-Appointed Campus Critic

by Jim Orndoff

Over the past few weeks, I, as self-appointed campus critic, have been taking jobs at numerous professors, particularly those groups responsible for the making of rules. Since it is the opinion of student groups have organized for the new school year, it was necessary to pass through the halls certain things were said about these groups.

There are certain faults which all student organizations have in common. First of all, I believe that leaders of Honors Council, regardless of how sincerely concerned they appear to be about the problems of their fellows, are nothing more than administrative puppets, "re-men" (or women) for the students. We students are the environment where the students are supposed to be given to the freedom to grow themselves, in my opinion, when a group of行政部门 exists, the students are more disturbed than the students grow, particularly by the devils mentioned which are intended to function entirely under students.

Another fault which these groups have in common is that of a devilish one is that, I believe, that this is a true self-government. The question of what to whom, mainly because this is a fundamental fault. We need a strong leader, one who has a true self-government.

However, there are those of us, students and faculty alike, who will not be deterred. There have been meetings to evaluate this student unrest and there will continue to be such meetings. Full scale demonstrations may even result because of this arbitrary handling of students by the powers-that-be. Of course, I am not advocating rebellion; that is not in print. However, something must be done, done quickly, if we are to maintain some measure of true self-government.

I therefore appeal to my readers, my instructors, and to my students, to voice their discontent with these arbitrary policies. Something must be done, done quickly, if we are to maintain some measure of true self-government.

Madison Speaks Out

of multiversity will soon enter the grounds of History.

Take for example the University of California at Berkeley, where student demonstrations have not yet been fully erupted as the result of the student's realization of his identity on the campus. Berkeley has over 27,000 students who rank in the top 12% of their high school class. This prestige is equalled by the university, many of which are Nobel laureates and leading scholars. However, many of these famous teachers are met only in the lecture halls, for they are far too engrossed in research and writing commitments to have time for individual students.

The student is also pressured by the enormity of the institution and its bureaucratic organization. Not only the professors, but the administration, remote themselves from the students. As a result is a communication within the university which has disintegrated—communication between students and teachers, between students and administration. More numbers, on an IBM card have tended to alienate the students from the university, because of the breakdown in communications. As a result, the administration has become an overwhelming authority where such a system would seem to be maintained by the sheer weight of its own mass. This makes the struggle even more arduous.

Examinations are by arrangement for classes that do not meet on Monday or Tuesday and for classes whose enrollment will sometimes inaugurate them to their goals.

All students will draw numbers in Wayland Recreation Room, after dinner, on the dates listed above. Housing will take place in DeanGarber's office at 6:30 p.m. on the dates listed above.

Dean Makes Announcements

Because of the length of time that it takes the local Civil Service people to obtain approval for administering the test on campus and also to obtain the test forms, it was not known until shortly before the Easter vacation when the test could be scheduled. Then it appeared that it would be difficult to schedule it after Easter because of other events and because of the crowded schedule. Therefore, it was decided to schedule it before Easter. Apparently many of you that signed up originally were not able to sign up again and take the test. We regret that this happened. It might be possible for the local Civil Service people to schedule another session if you are interested. Please leave your name by Room 6 in Alumnae Hall as soon as possible if you would like for us to see if another session could be scheduled.

The official date for withdrawal is the date that the withdrawal card is received in the office of the Dean of Students. Therefore, if you plan to withdraw, you should make arrangements for this card to be in on the last day that you are actually on campus.
