Campus resource answers community-related questions

Where do I buy tickets, Warren or the Convo? Can

I check out a library book on campus? When is the astronomy park open? Who do I contact to find JMU student volunteers? Can I take courses at JMU? Where do I park for a softball game? The JMU online community resource directory is available to answer these and many more questions from community members, JMU parents and campus visitors.

The online resource also features information about campus construction projects like the Forbes Center for the Performing Arts, East Campus Library, Centennial Hall and the athletics facility expansions and renovations. Community resource users can also learn more about Greater Madison, a nonprofit organization established in 1971 to advance a mutually beneficial relationship between the university and the local community.

[In Memoriam]

Remembering William Thomas

Professor Emeritus of Philosophy and Religion William “Bill” W. Thomas died May 22, 2008.

Thomas was a longtime resident of Harrisonburg and retired from JMU as a full professor in 1997. “Dr. Bill touched so many JMU community members with his deep love of teaching the scriptures, theology and humanities,” says JMU professor of philosophy and religion Bill O’Meara.

Thomas’ former student Stacey Black O’Donnell (’01) says, “Dr. Thomas was always quick to greet us with a warm welcome and a smile, even if we arrived late to his 8 a.m. class. He addressed each of us as “professor,” which reflected his belief that we all had something to learn from each other. He was certainly a treasure to JMU and the community.”
