Cloud Burst Comes From Sky

In Comedy, "The Rainmaker"

On the stage virtue nearly always wins out and villainy is surely punished, and so the theatre can generally be called a Moral Force.

But there's some doubt about this generality in connection with "The Rainmaker", the hilarious comedy by N. Richard Nash which the Better Theatre of Virginia will present to-night at Madison. Curtain is at 8 p.m., and seats were reserved from the Treasurer's Office.

For "The Rainmaker" of the comedy's title is a fraud—and in the play there's no way to prove his honesty or dishonesty. He's a phib, handsome and picturesqueness, who guarantees to bring on a rainstorm to save a drought-stricken ranch in the South-west for $100.

He isn't a dangerous fraud, for he is so cleverly moundmock and interested with the gaudy image of him, tell him as a puerile deceiver, that no one could seriously be taken in by his boasts or his pitchfork equipment of a big derrick and some mystical white paint.

In fact, when the rancher and his family scoff at him and get ready to make him start hiking the road again, he plays them with lines like "There's always a drought where there's this picture above", and "Once in your life you've, gotta take a chance on a man".

Sophomores Hoist Anchor. Sail For Success Midst Ship Gaiety

Class Of '59 Treads Waterway To Stardom With Presentation

by Allene Cross

"Anchors Aweigh!" Sophomores, and our ship was launched for our class night! Our theme was the Navy, and Aunt Sarah was officially the Sophomore Class "Undie Sam". In the introduction there were four girls who read a letter from Aunt Sarah. They have been drafted into the Navy due to the man shortage. Betty Mae Hadfield was the ballerina; Ann Davis, mountain girl; Johnny Barger, secretary; and Patricia Nichols portrayed "slient Susie."

And "Awake! We Go!"

First act took place in a reception center in the women were signing up, being issued clothes, and receiving those dreaded physical examinations. Some of the characters in this act were: Sarah Jane Ashley, Admiral; the "very fat Betty" Eubanks; and the shore patrol who took her, Callie Ruth. Others in this act were the secretary, Annette Showell, the know-it-all cheerleader.

The men, who came to this induction center because they are a little "tipsy" were Howard Whitmore, Gerald Myers, Bob Miller, and Rooney Nee. Barbara Dixon, Barbara Tucker, Mary Frances Story, Margaret Bohnert, and Barbara Tucker, who were all in the center.

The song, "Sailing" over the Broadway set, was sung by Judy Wiley, Barbara Tucker, Jane Yount, Jo Art, Martha Burnett, and Ruby Gooch. The closing scene of act I was a电 frozen statue of "Three Little Maids at Roberts."

Act II took place in the Barracks room behind the latrines. The female barracks with numerous latrines, and the hospital were all in the spotlight, there are those who were in the spotlight, there are those who were in the spotlight, there are those who were there.

The men were six, young, George, Howard Whitmore, Gerald Myers, Bob Miller, and Ronnie Ney. Barbara Dixon, Barbara Tucker, Mary Frances Story, Margaret Bohnert, and Barbara Tucker, who were all in the center.

The song, "Lay Down Your Arms" found "swabbies" Ronnie Ney and Howard Whitmore complete latrine duties for the female barracks, making much "commodeshun" in the process.

Ladies Aid

Chairmen of the program committee was Janet Baldwin and Patsy Richards. In charge of ushers was Walter Roberts, concert pianist, at 8 p.m. in Wilson Auditorium.
