76ers tap Ruland in 3rd

Fisher picked in 9th round

By JEFF WOODS

After leading the James Madison University basketball team to two conference championships and three NCAA tournaments, Dan Ruland and Charles Fisher were chosen by the Philadelphia 76ers Tuesday in the National Basketball Association draft.

Ruland, last year's co-player of the year in the Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC) Southern Division, was a 76ers third round selection, making him the 70th player chosen.

Fisher, the nation's second leading free throw shooter last year at 91.3 percent, was taken by Philadelphia in the ninth round, 206th overall.

"It's definitely going to be exciting," Ruland said after hearing of his selection, "It was really unexpected. I wasn't able to watch the draft, so I waited for Coach Campanelli to call," said the

'One of three third round choices made the team'

6'8" Ruland. "When coach called me he said that someone from the 76ers called him earlier in the draft; then in the third round they drafted me."

"My agent said to expect maybe late third or early fourth round," Ruland said, "So I figured I'd go somewhere in the fourth. It really was a nice surprise to go that high."

When he learned that one of every three players selected in the third round of last year's draft made the team, Ruland said, "That does sound kind of promising, even more so than I thought. I figured there was a lot less chance of making it from the third round."

Ruland said the 76ers have an established team, "and they've got a guy like (Mark) Iavaroni, that kind of lessens my chances quite a bit, I would think."

In Ruland's final year with the Dukes, the Annapolis, Md., native averaged 15.1 points and 6.7 rebounds per game to lead the team in each category. In his four years of play at JMU, Ruland finished seventh on the team's all-time scoring list with 1,255 points, and fourth in team career rebounds with 640.

An honorable mention all-America selection last season, Ruland was named to the all-ECAC south and to the all-tournament teams at the ECAC South Tournament and the Cardinal Varsity Club Classic at Ball State University.

After three seasons as the Dukes' starting center Ruland said, "I'm not sure what position I'm going to be playing, but it will be an honor and at the same time it's going to be very exciting and interesting."

JMU Coach Lou Campanelli suggested Ruland would be small for an NBA center and would be more adept as a power forward. "If they have a need for a player like Dan, I think that increases his chances of making it," Campanelli said. "Naturally when you have fella's like Julius Erving, Bobby Jones and Moses Malone up front, you're going into a front line that's pretty well stocked."

Campanelli said Philadelphia has some pretty good players, "but Dan might be what they're looking for."

Campanelli was the first to be contacted by the 76ers and the phone call came in the middle of the draft's second round. "Bill Cunningham called

Caving

'Take nothing with you, leave only footprints'

By SUSAN SHAW

I wasn't too enthusiastic when Vicki Liddle called to ask me to join her on an expedition to Glade Cave. I had explored Glade at least a dozen times.

But this trip would be different, Vicki said, because Eddie Good, a graduate of Blue Ridge Community College, would be caving for the first time. By travelling with a novice, the thrill of the first caving experience might be recalled.

Also, David Deland, president of the JMU Caving Club, and Dave Shantz, an experienced caver from VPI, would join us.

Our time underground would not be more than three hours, so I took only the essentials: hard hat, carbide lamp, cave pack, coveralls, and a change of clothes.

At 12:30 p.m., June 17, the five of us met at Vicki's to sign out. This is an important but often neglected obligation for all cavers. Letting someone know where you are and when you will return is crucial in the event of an emergency.

We signed in our estimated time of return as 5:30 p.m., and left for Glade.

Glade is the largest cave in Augusta County. Its more than 3,000 feet of passage winds into an intricate underground maze, which often leads even seasoned cavers astray.

We arrived at Glade, which like most area caves is located in a pasture inhabited by dairy cows, and prepared to go underground.

While pulling on my mud-stained coveralls and loading my lamp with carbide, I asked Eddie, the inexperienced member of our group, if he was afraid.

"Oh, I'm looking forward to dying," he said. He did seem uncomfortable, however, when I told him there are two steep drops in the cave, one 12 feet and one eight.

With our hard hats on and our boots tied securely, we slid through the muddy, three-foot-wide entrance.

Five feet into the cave a large sign is hammered into the wall: Caves Are Protected by Law. Cavers have a saying — "Take nothing with you, leave only footprints."

I was leading, feeling the sharp, jagged rocks against my knees as I crawled, wishing I had brought knee pads. But the cave became deeper, and we were all grateful to be able to stand.

Throughout the trip we were faced with decisions about whether to go right, left, straight, up, or down. Eddie, being the unsuspecting beginner, was constantly challenged to follow leads that the rest of us knew were dead ends.

After taking several winding turns, we stood atop the first drop. It was only eight feet, but involved some tricky moves. If anyone was nervous, he wouldn't admit it.

Most area caves, like Glade, are horizontal, with a few short climbs.

We continued until we came to the second drop, a 12-foot mud slide, and slid to the bottom. Soon we came to the register room, where travelers can sign their names, hometowns, and the date, in a book kept dry in a can.

Here Glade becomes complicated, dividing into four passages. All but one are dead ends. Later the cave will divide further. Eventually, by following the right passages, we entered the largest and last room of the cave. That is the lakeroom, so named because in the spring it fills up with water.

The lakeroom is the most beautiful part of Glade. Flowstone covers the walls, and pipe-organ columns stretch from ceiling to floor. Stalagmites rise from the floor and stalactites hang precariously from the ceiling.

We gathered in this room and sat in a circle. "Is everyone ready? OK, Blow out your lights." Darkness and timelessness surrounded us.

The only sounds were the persistent, eerie, drip...drip...drip from the ceiling and the occasional flutter of bat wings.

Vicki interrupted the stillness. "If you were out of light, could you find your way out?" The answer, of course, was no, and we realized the importance of safety precautions such as three sources of light.

David Deland fired up his lamp. What a relief light can be!

We were tired and cold in the 53 degree air, so we began the journey out.

Up, down, over and under rocks, crawling, walking, bending, climbing and turning — 30 minutes later we reached the exit.

The outside world looked beautiful; green instead of brown, trees instead of rocks, and sun instead of carbide. It was like seeing the countryside for the first time.

Why do people go caving?

Some seek escape. A hundred feet underground there is no need to worry about a job, unfinished homework, or a skipped class.

Others look for the fellowship — the shared experience that requires cooperation and trust.

Some explore caves for scientific reasons, for the exercise, or just to cool off in the summer. But the majority go for the adventure.

"Well, Eddie, how did you like caving?" I asked.

"Let's do it again," he answered.

Editor's Note: The JMU Caving Club will not meet formally this summer, but members are still active. Anyone interested in caving should contact Vicki Liddle, membership chairman, at 433-9195. The club will resume meetings this fall.

Hardee's request denied

There won't be a Hardee's near JMU's Port Republic Road entrance, at least in the near future.

A unanimous vote denying a rezoning request to build a Hardee's at Port Republic Road and I-81 earned the Harrisonburg City Council a standing ovation June 14.

The applause was sprinkled with cries of "thank you" from the 120 people who crowded council chambers.

Opponents of rezoning had argued that a restaurant at the requested site would destroy the residential quality of the neighborhood and worsen an already difficult traffic problem at the intersection of Port Republic Road and I-81.

Vice Mayor Walter F. Green III took advantage of the crowded meeting to disclaim charges of conflict of interest that had been raised against him.

Because Green's wife, Vera Preston Green, owns a quarter-share of another Hardee's lot, on Cantrell Avenue, some rezoning opponents said Green should not vote on the rezoning for the Port Republic Road site.

Green said he consulted Commonwealth's Attorney David I. Walsh and a Virginia Municipal League attorney who affirmed that no conflict of interest existed and that Green was eligible to vote in the matter.

Green called the conduct of his critics "rude and disorderly," and stated that their "reckless allegations" were only meant to "harass the council."

Mayor Roy H. Erickson lost his re-election bid four weeks ago, some say because of his support for the Hardee's rezoning.

Councilman Elon W. Rhodes made the motion for denial of rezoning the site from R-1 (single family residential) to B-2 (general business).

As a member of the planning commission, Rhodes had supported the rezoning, but he said he changed his stance due to the consistently large turnout of Hardee's opponents at council meetings.

Rhodes said it was "extremely difficult to make this decision."

Councilman Raymond C. Dingleline Jr., a long-time opponent of the rezoning, seconded the motion for denial.

Hardee's franchise agent Boddie-Noell Enterprises, Inc. of Rocky Mount, N.C., told the Daily News-Record that it will probably not try to overturn the council's decision in court.

me at home and said, 'Lou, run me down on Dan Ruland.' I was naturally excited that he was interested in Dan," said Campanelli. "They were surprised that for a big man he shot 54 percent from the floor, and I told him Dan's got a very good touch."

"I'm excited for Dan. He's worked very hard during his four years here, and he's improved each year," said the Dukes head coach. "I think the culmination of any college player's career is to be drafted."

Campanelli said that a player drafted in the first three rounds has a more realistic chance of making it in the NBA.

"Of course, last year 33 percent of the guys made it, and those odds aren't too bad for a third round pick," he said.

"I think if Dan goes and impresses the Sixers, whether he makes it or not, it may help with a recommendation to another club or open up possibilities in Europe," said Campanelli. "All in all I think things are going to work out for Dan Ruland."

With Charles Fisher's selection during the ninth round, the chances of making the 76ers are much lower. But for the 6'2" guard from Cape Charles, Va., at least he's been provided an opportunity to try out for the world champions.

Campanelli said Fisher must make the most of his opportunity. "Naturally, the higher you get drafted, the better your chances are, but as long as you're drafted, you've got hope," Campanelli said. "I'm sure Charles is going to look at it as just another challenge, and he's going to do the best he can."

"To be drafted by the world champion 76ers is a credit to Charles and a credit to our program," Campanelli said.

Initially, Fisher is going to be up against rookies, "and who knows what can happen?" Campanelli said. "As long as you've got your foot in the door, it's open."

"He's not like a four-year all-America expecting to be drafted in the first round, but he's very excited," Campanelli said.

Last year, besides finishing second in the nation from the free throw line, Fisher's 10.6 points per game placed him second only to Ruland in scoring on the Dukes' 20-11 team.

In his four-year career at JMU, Fisher scored 1,022 points and averaged 9.0 points per game. As a sophomore Fisher averaged 10.6 points per game and was named most valuable player in the ECAC South tournament.

Ruland and Fisher represent the fourth and fifth JMU player's to be selected in an NBA draft. Sherman Dillard was selected by Indiana in the 1978 draft; Steve Stielper was chosen by Indiana in 1980; and Linton Townes plays for the Portland Trail Blazers after being selected in the second round of last season's draft.

Going to Houston

Sampson an unsurprising first pick

Harrisonburg resident and three-time college player of the year Ralph Sampson was the first player selected in Tuesday's National Basketball Association draft.

The Houston Rockets, after winning only 14 games last year, were given the first pick in the draft by virtue of their last place finish. The Rockets picked Sampson.

Sampson led the Cavaliers of the University of Virginia to an NIT championship in his first year and to the NCAA tournament over the next three years. UVA went to the NCAA final four in Sampson's sophomore year. In the four years Sampson attended UVA, the Cavaliers won 112 games, losing only 24.

Sampson's jersey hangs from the rafters at University Hall in Charlottesville; his number was retired last March after Sampson broke UVA records in scoring, rebounding, and blocked shots.

While at Harrisonburg High School, Sampson turned the Blue Streaks into champions. Now a member of the Rockets, he intends to do the same thing in Houston.

"In the long run, I can't tell how I'll feel, but in the short run, I'm pleased," Sampson said after his selection by Houston.

"Coming into pro basketball for me is a lot like it was going into college out of high school, you don't know what to expect," Sampson said.

What Sampson can expect is a salary in seven figures, and he will probably be the highest paid rookie in the history of the NBA.

However, Sampson downplays the fact that he will soon become the richest rookie in the league. "If it was for the money, I'd have been a pro for a couple of years by now," Sampson said.

Throughout his college career,

Sampson turned down lucrative offers from teams like the Boston

Celtics to remain in school. Last May Sampson received a Bachelor of Arts degree in Communications.

Sampson said he is looking forward to playing and fitting in with Houston's organization.

In Texas, a state famous for doing things on a grand scale, the 7-foot-4-inch favorite son of Harrisonburg will have no trouble fitting in.

Construction of new dorm to begin

Construction on a new dorm for James Madison University will begin this summer.

Named in honor of two former members of the JMU Board of Visitors, Walter J. McGraw of Richmond and Nellie L. Long of Edinburg, the dorm will house 230 students. The estimated cost of the new dorm, to be located on Cantrell Avenue next to Bell Hall, is $3 million. Both McGraw and Long served as board members for eight years, the maximum time allowed.

McGraw is a graduate of University of Richmond and Washington and Lee School of Law, and is now a partner in a Richmond law firm. He was a member of the JMU Board of Visitors from 1974 to 1982, serving as the board's rector from 1980 to 1982 and vice rector from 1978 to 1980.

Long, a 1949 graduate of JMU, is president of the JMU Alumni board of directors. She served on the JMU Board of Visitors from 1972 to 1980.

1,800 enroll

By SUSAN POLLY

Temperatures that soared into the nineties did not deter the approximately 1,800 students who enrolled June 13 for the regular 1983 summer sessions. Final enrollment, expected to be more than 2,200, will be tallied in August as registration continues through the summer.

In addition, more than 1,900 students enrolled in May session in 1983.

Of those now taking regular summer classes, 74 percent are undergraduates. Of the May term enrollment, 92.5 percent were undergraduates.

This year for the first time in 10 years, contingency courses were offered. Contingency courses were those with low enrollment histories or courses that had not been offered for the past two years. The purpose of contingency courses, according to Dr. Elizabeth Finlayson, dean of the summer school, was "to use the summer school dollar where it would be most cost effective." Nineteen courses were offered on contingency this year. Two of seven courses scheduled in the May term were cancelled because of low enrollment, as were seven of 12 courses in the eight-week or first four-week sessions.

Thirty-three students had to re-register, an "inconvenience to them and to seven faculty members," Finlayson said.

The university will have to reconsider offering courses on contingency, according to Finlayson. "It would have cost the University approximately $10,000 in faculty salaries to teach those courses," she said. "I'm not certain the inconvenience to faculty and students was worth the savings."

THE DINNER THEATRE

SUMMER 1983

Comedies to draw 17,000

By MARY McGANN

The JMU Dinner Theatre, now in its seventh year, will perform its two shows for more than 17,000 people this summer.

All performances are now sold out, but seats occasionally open up, and may be available from the box office. The best time to call is Mondays and Thursdays at 10 a.m., according to a box office spokesman. The box office phone number is 433-6740.

Tickets for evening performances are $14 for adults, $9 for children. Matinees are $11 for adults and $7 for children.

The Dinner Theatre offers six dinner shows and one brunch matinee each week. Performances began June 2 and will continue through Aug. 14.

The Dinner Theatre features two comedies, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," by Stephen Sondheim, and "A Flea in Her Ear," a French play by Georges Feydeau.

The first play, "Forum," is a musical comedy about a "prince in search of a girl, a father in search of a fling, and a servant in search of his freedom." A series of incidents undermines their efforts.

The second play, "A Flea in Her Ear," is a French farce in which a woman, Raymonde, tries to prove her husband's infidelity.

Both plays have more than a dozen characters each, the majority of whom are JMU graduates or have participated in previous Madison productions. The director is Allen Lyndrup, an associate professor of communication arts here.

JMU's Food Services provides an all-you-can-eat buffet, consisting of four entrees that include steamed shrimp and round tips of beef. The buffet also offers a 34-item salad bar, a choice of five desserts, and wine or beer.

Twenty JMU students work in the food section of the Dinner Theatre. "The productions appeal to all ages and the meals to all palates," said waiter Carl Alberio.

Students tour, study New England culture

By BARBARA JEAN GALE

Five James Madison University students and two faculty members went on a three-week study tour of

New England during May session.

Led by Dr. Joan Frederick, associate professor of English at JMU, the group explored the major literary, cultural and historical sights of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut.

Highlights of the tour included a visit to Mystic Seaport Museum, a restored 19th century whaling village in Essex, Conn., a ferry ride to Nantucket Island, and a Boston Red Sox game. The group also walked the Freedom Trail in Boston, Mass., which includes a stop at Paul Revere's house and other places of Revolutionary War significance. Another visit was to the church where Harriet Beecher Stowe got the inspiration to write "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The group saw two excellent repertory theater productions and a delightful Boston Pops concert, according to Frederick.

The group was surprised by the friendliness of New Englanders. "They weren't cold or reserved" as they are often portrayed, Frederick said. The travelers also were impressed by Walden Pond, made famous in the writing of Henry David Thoreau. "We didn't expect it to be as big as it is."

Participants earned three credit hours that can be applied toward an English major or minor or the American Studies program.

Students were required to read Nathaniel Hawthorne's "House of the Seven Gables," and several short works by E. B. White, Thoreau and others. Each student kept a journal and wrote a paper upon returning to campus.

This is the first May Session in New England that JMU has sponsored. Frederick said the students think the experience was "very worthwhile," and the tour will be conducted again in two years.

Frederick, a native of Connecticut, spent four weeks in New England last summer planning the trip. Such trips enrich education by taking students away from Harrisonburg and the classroom, Frederick said.

Holiday lookout

In an effort to encourage safe driving and reduce crashes during the July 4 holiday weekend, Virginia state police will increase the number of troopers on patrol from 6 p.m. Friday through midnight July 4.

The department will be participating in a state-sponsored national program known as Operation CARE — an acronym for Combined Accident Reduction Effort — for the sixth consecutive year. Troopers will focus particular attention on certain sections of major highways where experience indicates that high traffic volume and high crash frequency can be anticipated.
