Teachers and Students

Since the beginning of a formal educational system in the dim and distant past, learned educators had little thought for what the student himself wants. It's the foundation on which you build all the rest of your years at Madison and it has to be strong. You can't wipe out the bad impressions made at the start and year all over again as a sophomore. What you do now and what you stand for to determine to a great extent your everlasting position with the faculty and student body.

If you make a good start—in academic work, extracurricular activities, and general attitude toward college life—you've accomplished something infinitely more important than anything you can possibly do in all the three years. It's by that start, counts so much.

Make It Good

Have you ever stopped to consider the true significance of the word "start"? It's a simple-enough word, but those five letters are literally packed with dynamite. The existence of a handbook training course and an orientation class testify to its importance the administration attaches to the word; but unless you yourself grasp the full meaning all outside efforts are in vain.

One would no doubt argue that the result of any kind of course depends on a good start; you would anyone else the statement that a good start in a movie, book, or lecture tends to make a more successful audience. Yet two-thirds of us fail in spite of it and let the most golden opportunity of our college life fade slowly into the background.

All of which sounds rather sentimental, doesn't it? But it's absolutely true. The tragic thing about it is the fact that the light very seldom dawns until our junior or senior year when it's too late to do much about it.

Don't let anyone tell you that "freshman year" is just a period of adjusting. It isn't! It's the foundation on which you build all the rest of your years at Madison and it has to be strong. You can't wipe out the bad impressions made at the start and year all over again as a sophomore. What you do now and what you stand for to determine to a great extent your everlasting position with the faculty and student body.

New Female Coach Tries New Plan

Jean Van Landingham Plans New Scheme of Practice and Play

Having signed up approximately 125 hockey participants, Jean Van Landingham, hockey sports leader, is preparing to put into effect the official scheme of hockey season Monday.

Varying from those of former seasons, a new method of team division and practices is being established. All old girls who have been on hockey have been divided into two squads, the Purple and Golds. In a like manner, the freshmen, the Blues, take up two other groups, the Reds and the Blues, with two selected up-fronters to assist in coaching.

The varsity squad of last year has been noticeably decreased with the loss of several first-string players. Ann Van Landingham, center forward; Peggy Rye, left half; Evelyn Patterson, left full; Sue Quinn, right half, were among those who graduated. Shirley Cline, who played on B. C. varsity for two years, transfer from Blackstone College, has been a significant event in Madison College history for years, the Old Terpsichorean Group.

The fall classes held every evening, which included both boys' and girls' teams, were among those who graduated. Shirley Cline, who played on B. C. varsity for two years, transfer from Blackstone College, has been a significant event in Madison College history for years, the Old Terpsichorean Group.

The work of excavating for the new $72,000.00 heating plant was begun on Friday, September 24. The installation, which will be held at Mary college, will be held until after the Virginia Tournament, which will be held at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, probably the weekend of November 4.

Joe Landingham, hockey sports leader, assisted by Marguerite Bell and Bonnie Powell, will be in charge of the new plan.

The new plan in the selection of class officers, the Junior class appointed a nominating committee which will select the nominees for the vice-president, treasurer, secretary, assistant-secretary, and business manager. This plan is being tried this year for the first time.
