Amarees, what you want: Vanity? Do you consider the value of a school newspaper to the individual, to the school, and to society? For me, the value is immense. It allows me to express my thoughts and ideas, to perfect my writing skills, and to gain a greater understanding of the world around me. I believe that everyone should have the opportunity to contribute to their school newspaper, as it is a platform for creativity, self-expression, and community engagement.

Speaking of self-expression, I am quite surprised to see how much this is being bemoaned. There is a trend of thinking that self-expression is a bad thing, that it is somehow vulgar or disrespectful. I do not agree with this sentiment. I think that self-expression is a fundamental aspect of being human. It allows us to communicate our thoughts and feelings, to connect with others, and to create a sense of community.

As for the idea of school newspapers as a platform for vanity, I believe that this is a bit of an overgeneralization. While it is true that some people may use school newspapers to boast about their achievements, I think that this is a small minority. The vast majority of school newspapers are dedicated to promoting responsible and creative self-expression.

In conclusion, I believe that school newspapers are a valuable asset to any school. They provide a platform for self-expression, creativity, and community engagement. I hope that more people will come to appreciate their value.

Sincerely,

College Becoming Sponsor of Movies

The day of the "tick" is passing away. Every day it is more and more evident that the college man is more and more interested in the motion picture world, which is gradually becoming a part of his daily life. The new generation of college men is not so interested in the traditional activities such as sports and society meetings. Instead, they are drawn to the excitement and entertainment offered by the movies. As a result, many colleges are now considering becoming sponsors of movies to attract and engage their students.

Harrisonburg Dairy to Be Rebuilt on Extensive Scale

The Harrisonburg Dairy Company's plant, which was recently destroyed by fire, is to be rebuilt on a scale that is even more extensive than before.
