One year after the largest mass shooting in the history of the United States, students reflect on Tech massacre

BY JESSICA SHERF

Thirty-two flower arrangements surrounded the names of those killed by Virginia Tech's then-31-year-old student, Cho Seung-Hui. It was a day to remember, to support them and keep the people in memory because it’s such a tragedy, one that we shouldn’t forget.

One of my best friends from childhood is a student there, and for little while... I want to think I should show some support, some love for Virginia Tech.

"I have not lost a spouse, I have not lost a child," he said. "But I love Tech and I know how difficult it would be to lose one," Kaine said. "I have pride and admiration in the Virginia Tech community, and for the broader Virginia Tech community, those who love this institution." Kaine said. "For those who may have no connection, but grabbed on to it. "We all lost it together as a country. If we realize how brief our lives are, we will focus on things that really matter." The projectors can give the illusion of a textbook, providing just what the teacher needs on the screen. The students can view the entire text of the book on the screen through a magnification system, and the teacher can annotate the text with notes and illustrations as needed.

"I would rather look at them than look at a textbook. It just brings things to life," added Eckel. "It was very helpful for some of our different learning abilities."

How to Have a Safe Easter Weekend

We wish you a happy and safe Easter holiday. Here are some tips to keep you and your loved ones safe during the weekend:

1. Avoid Large Gatherings: To minimize the risk of spreading illness, especially during the Easter weekend, it is recommended to avoid large gatherings. If you do attend a gathering, make sure to follow CDC guidelines for social distancing and wearing masks.

2. Practice Good Hand Hygiene: Washing hands frequently with soap and water for at least 20 seconds can help prevent the spread of germs. Use hand sanitizer when soap and water are not available.

3. Monitor Your Health: Keep an eye on your health and the health of your fellow attendees. If you or others show symptoms of illness, avoid further interactions and seek medical attention.

4. Stay Informed: Keep up-to-date with the latest news and guidelines regarding the pandemic. This will help you stay informed about potential changes to travel or event policies.

Certain types of characters on TV shows are shown in a certain way, causing Americans to view certain types of people in a certain way according to Arboleda.

"We know that the way a character is depicted has a direct impact on how we view people in real life," said Arboleda. "We often extrapolate from what we see on TV to how we interact with people in real life."

Arboleda pointed out that certain racial stereotypes are repeated in both TV and film. For example, in TV shows and movies, black men are often portrayed as violent, aggressive characters, while white men are often portrayed as innocent, victimized characters.

Arboleda also pointed out that the media often portrays certain types of people in specific ways. For example, in TV shows and movies, Asians are often portrayed as intellectual and Asian-American women as hypersexual.

Arboleda said that the media puts us into specific categories. He pointed out that the media often portrays certain types of people as predators and should be viewed with suspicion.

"To America we are racist because we believe in the concept of race," he said.

Approximately 45 students listened to Arboleda as he tried to convince them not to view people based on stereotypes they see in the media. He blamed the media for intentionally perpetuating stereotypes.

People who are into film or television recognize these narratives," Arboleda said. "The problem is the media, the media puts us into specific categories.

"In America we are racist because we believe in the concept of race," he said. "Someone from San Francisco is not going to have the same culture as someone from Akron, Ohio.

"You can't stereotype America, it's too big," he said. "Someone from San Francisco is not going to have the same culture as someone from Akron, Ohio."

Arboleda spoke at length about how people perceive others. Within three to six seconds as you pass someone on the street, your brain decides who that person is, said Arboleda.

"Your brain isn't seeing a person. It's seeing a stereotype," said Arboleda. "We perceive others from a producer's standpoint, arc required to follow the underrepresented stereotypes that are often perpetuated by the media."

According to Arboleda, people are divided into certain categories. This is because the media has been portraying these categories for years. Arboleda said that the media often portrays certain types of people as predators and should be viewed with suspicion.

A Harvard study released in 1998 supports Arboleda's assertion that the media portrays certain types of people in a certain way. The study found that a majority of music videos portrayed black men as aggressors. Black men were depicted as aggressors in 35 percent of all music videos.

"There were more accepting of interracial couples, according to Entman. Audience protests showed that evidence audiences were more accepting of interracial couples, according to Entman.

Arboleda ended the right trying to answer the question of how to describe America to foreigners. "You can't stereotype America, it's too big," he said. "Someone from San Francisco is not going to have the same culture as someone from Akron, Ohio."

Letters to the Editor

Don't Be So Quick to Judge Beards

I recently read the latest installment of the 'Battle of the Sexes' comic strip, and I must say, the dialogue is as predictable as a high school romance novel. I've been a fan of the series for some time now, and I must admit, I was slightly disappointed with this particular installment. It seems as though the writers have run out of ideas, and are now relying on tired tropes and clichés.

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concerns regarding the current depiction of beards in the media. I believe it is important to recognize the diversity in facial hair and to avoid making sweeping generalizations. It is not fair to assume that all men with beards are unattractive or unappealing. I believe that it is crucial to approach this topic with an open mind and to consider the individual characteristics and preferences of each person.

Sincerely,

Familiar comedies formula for success

Judd Apatow film ‘Forgetting Sarah Marshall’ delivers audiences laughs

BY SUSAN SANTITIUS

College students are familiar with Judd Apatow’s comedic winning streak from “The 40-Year-Old Virgin” to last year’s “ Knocked Up.” This year, his film “Forgetting Sarah Marshall” promises audiences the same old formula for success.

His brand of comedic genius, equal parts acerbic and sweet, celebrates the underdog in a refreshingly honest manner. "Forgetting Sarah Marshall," Apatow’s latest production, is a satirical account of a rock band leader who, after recently divorcing his wife, falls for an ex-girlfriend. Despite its formulaic premise, the film manages to remain true to its roots.

If you’ve been wondering what that “feat. T-Pain” after so many songs on your iPod means, you can find out Friday night in the Convocation Center. T-Pain has worked with today’s hottest musicians, from Kanye West to Virginia’s own Chris Brown. He even won a Grammy for his collaboration with West on "Good Life." Opening for T-Pain is DJ Ralph, whose mix of party songs and hip-hop beats will keep the audience hooked. His set will consist of popular songs by artists including T-Pain, Rihanna, and Justin Timberlake. The event will cost a little less than $50,000 to bring T-Pain here, according to Bidler.

The Student Program Board’s choice to host T-Pain at JMU was based on popular demand gathered by an online survey. "We do a survey, and it’s basically an e-mail sent out to the student body," Bidler said. If you’ve been wondering what that "feat. T-Pain" after so many songs on your iPod means, you can find out Friday night in the Convocation Center.

Student Program Board Winners Announced

The Student Program Board hosted the 15th annual Student Film Festival at Grafton-Steady Theatre on Sunday. The event showcased 17 films produced by amateur filmmakers. The films ranged from comedies to horrors, and there were even an animated film, "Behind the Lens," by Sean Santiago. The films ranged from comedies to horrors, and there was even an animated film, "Behind the Lens," by Sean Santiago.

Out of 10 films released this year, the Student Program Board was able to win an audience favorite award. "Behind the Lens," a film about a group of friends who set out to make a feature film, amazed the audience. The film won Best Narrative Feature and Best Editing for its seamless flow of dialogue and visual storytelling.

devastately. While Peter is undoubtedly immature and oddball, his earnestness is occasionally endearing. His sidekick in the film is the cynical and seemingly heartless Rachel (Mila Kunis), who is often shown to be unimpressed by Peter's attempts at romance. Kunis's performance is flawlessly timed to the comic beats of the film, and her chemistry with Aldous Snow (Jason Segel) is palpable.

The movie is set in a small town where Peter and his friends are struggling to cope with their personal problems. The seaside location provides a picturesque backdrop for their adventures, and the film is shot with great care and attention to detail. The characters are well-defined, and the plot is engaging enough to keep the audience interested.

The movie is a great example of what can be achieved with a talented cast and a thoughtful script. The performances are excellent, and the direction is confident. Overall, "Forgetting Sarah Marshall" is a fun and entertaining film that will leave you feeling satisfied and entertained.
