Governing without the Party Aisle

Governor McAuliffe talks with student journalists about our nation’s future

“An educational system that discriminates against those who are different is not a system worth fighting for.”

Gov. Terry McAuliffe started student journalism from several of Virginia’s public colleges for a conversation that expanded the immigration ban to education, all while his friendly dog, Guinean, licked his arm.

While student centers celebrated college unity, talk turned to the immigration ban, primarily McAuliffe’s visit to how it affected families, especially those with disabilities.

“Why are we putting America through this?” McAuliffe said. “This is not an America I know.”

The governor also highlighted the plight of the ban for Americans. Trump’s executive order “put a target on American students,” which he passed especially hurt out-of-state students, who are substantially subsidizing education for the students. He also said that he’s put his students and their families through so much stress.

McAuliffe said he listened to him earlier this year, before he was president, I would’ve said that there’s no way he’d even get to the stage.

I didn’t expect that people who deny climate change. I didn’t expect that people who call for building a wall on our southern border and sexually assaulting women, call for a ban on Muslims, and American students like yourself, my father wouldn’t have been killed by a car bomb. They wouldn’t have been killed by a criminal. They wouldn’t have been killed by a police.

I’m disappointed in many of my fellow Americans, as a Muslim-American child of immigrants, I don’t see any unifying force here, except for us. I saw the stories of the shoots of a young people’s future, the stories of the shoots of their children. I didn’t expect that people who call for building a wall on our southern border and sexually assaulting women, call for a ban on Muslims, and American students like yourself, my father wouldn’t have been killed by a car bomb.

I didn’t expect that the usage of an executive order to push the Syrian refugee program, was one that many didn’t respect. I didn’t expect a candidate to openly ridicule those with disabilities, tell Asian-Americans “you have nothing to lose” when voting for him, joke about sexually-assaulting women, call for building a wall on our southern border and deny climate change. I didn’t expect that people who call for building a wall on our southern border and sexually assaulting women, call for a ban on Muslims, and American students like yourself, my father wouldn’t have been killed by a car bomb.

McAuliffe, who has a long history with Donald Trump — Trump demanded in a McAuliffe campaign — and the governor called President Trump after he won the two could work together. Despite his willingness to cross the party aisle to work with the president, McAuliffe values issue with Trump’s actions and passions.

“One thing that I believe that’s really bothersome, “McAuliffe said. “If you travel internationally, you’ll see we’re the greatest.”

Fareeha Rehman, a junior at George Mason University and a member of the editorial board of Professional Journalism, shared that her family has been killing countless innocent people from the dawn of our country, our president especially. I’m enraged by the fact that those who voted for Trump to put themselves in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of a boy yearning for a safe place to sleep at night. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country.

As a Muslim-American child of immigrants, a woman who cares about this (not the alternative one), I want those who voted for Trump to put themselves in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of a boy yearning for a safe place to sleep at night. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country.

To those who voted for Trump to put themselves in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of a boy yearning for a safe place to sleep at night. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country.

To those who voted for Trump to put themselves in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of a boy yearning for a safe place to sleep at night. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country.

To those who voted for Trump to put themselves in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of a boy yearning for a safe place to sleep at night. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country. Put yourself in the shoes of refugees fleeing their country.

The Faculty Senate of Virginia and many student representatives went to Richmond, Virginia, to attend the Virginia Education Advocacy Day, and try to stop the state government from continuing to cut the budget for higher education.

"One of the many things that makes Spanish Club so special is the interaction with the students," Rich said. "They seemed to acknowledge that this is a difficult year for the budget, but they appeared to be taking in the message that we gave them and [understood] our point of view."

"We are all very excited to go full force with this club," said Yaitza Lopez, the current president of the JMU Spanish Club. She added that the club had only been considered an official JMU club recently. Members welcome a diverse range of Spanish enthusiasts to join them at meetings.

"We’re going to have to make [cuts]," Democratic Gov. Terry McAuliffe said. "Everything matters. Welfare, education, public health, immigration, and the environment are all important."

When the end rolled around, McAuliffe pointed out that the revenue for the state was about 1.5 percent above what was forecasted. McAuliffe discussed the importance of all students getting a science, technology, engineering and math background, because "we are now in a world of innovation and perhaps, most importantly, how we move into the 21st century under President Trump."

When questioned about the message, McAuliffe said, "You can never have an economy if you put walls up."

argument we are trying to make. Rather, it is good for society in these regards. “

Charles King, senior vice president of administration and finance at JMU, explained how budget cuts will affect higher education. “The state is facing a shortfall because the budget was based on revenue growth of 3.2 percent and revenue growth has only been about 1.9 percent,” King said in an email. “The current deficit is $1.2 billion.”

This reduced funding will impact all educational institutions. King stated that each institution is at the same risk. “The Governor’s proposed budget calls for a 5% budget reduction in state funds for all institutions,” King said. “This means universities will have to reduce operating costs or raise tuition fees. ”

Many higher education institutions in Virginia will be facing budget cuts, which limits opportunities for these institutions. “One of the reasons SGA was willing to help us is because we don’t want student tuition to be increased either. We know that’s a big burden on students,” Piper said. “If the state would stop reducing the amount of funding of public institutions get, then the university would have far less need to increase tuition.”

Guendert agrees that changes should be made to prevent any further budget cuts. “We understand that times are tough right now,” Guendert said. “But that’s why we are not trying to ask for more money to prevent this from happening, but to stop additional budget cuts. Before the end of the semester, the legislators will be seen and they will be voting on this budget. That’s why the spring semester is so important.”

Piper stresses that because JMU isn’t a public institution, matters about the budget are taken very seriously. “We aren’t private, we don’t have those remarkable endowments,” Piper said. “We really do rely on Richmond, and if you keep taking money away from us, we’re not going to be able to do our jobs and do right by the student body as well as we could.”

There’s a pressing epidemic in the U.S. — it’s the one where 33.9% of adults and 17.7% of children are classified as obese. According to the National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES) conducted by the National Center for Health Statistics, these statistics have been increasing each year since 1960. This growing trend is concerning as obesity rates are rising in communities as well as ethnic and race groups. From 1962 to 2010, the number of African-Americans who are obese increased from 25.9% to 48.4%, and for Caucasians, it rose from 16.4% to 42.6%. This rise in obesity rates is a concerning disparity as it impacts people of all ages and geographic regions, with African-Americans being affected more than Caucasians.

The NHANES found that obesity is caused by a multitude of factors. One primary cause is the sedentary lifestyle many people are forced into due to work and daily responsibilities. Another factor is the availability of affordable, nutritious food. However, this is not the case for everyone, especially those in low-income areas where access to healthy food is limited. The high prevalence of obesity among African-Americans can be attributed to the lack of access to nutritious food, as well as the lack of safe spaces for physical activity. This issue is not limited to the United States; it is a global problem that affects people of all ages and ethnicities.

Bosnia and Herzegovina currently has the world's highest youth unemployment rate at 32 percent, due in part to political corruption, economic stagnation, and continued deepening of xenophobic wounds. Whenever I walk down streets in architecture, taking in the sights and sounds, I'm surrounded by people without jobs, protesting and manifesting. I wonder, however, what exactly our culture "is" anymore since Bosnia has been through so much. Political elections don't make people as much as they make politicians, and people are no closer to finding their beds, eating their food, and being warmed by their electricity until my parents found some grounding. Thoughts from a former war refugee

It's difficult to attempt to visualize a reality where I didn't develop my sensibilities in the U.S., or whether I would've in fact been able to cultivate my sense of self had I grown up in my beloved, yet wounded, Bosnia. This country if they don't rescind this deeply un-American executive order. Yet, we subsequently learned why the U.S. ought to have inclusive values, not the self-aggrandizing bureaucrats accused of committing terrorism, and zero murders came from the countries listed by President Trump's executive ban. “It's kind of a fun cross-over, thinking of the statues of the cross which is found in many church's in the U.S., because there are screens in the piece and you walk up to this altar-like thing,” Merino said. “There's sort of a dualism, you can walk up to and just read and listen to that kind of content, that kind of primal stuff when something becomes more muscular and when something becomes personal belief. There's a really subtle line between these two.”

At 12 years old, Kristi Blome rattled her hand-made maracas and sang out a song that she wrote herself, sitting on a rock at the edge of a stream. She was thinking about the stars, and about her dreams of being a musician, but her mother was not there to encourage her.

“Tentative Rumors” is a musical group that started as Kristi's own idea, but has since grown into a group of five friends, all interested in the arts.

“Tentative Rumors” is an acoustic band with a focus on folk music and world music. The members are all high school students and they have been performing together since 2013. They play covers of popular songs as well as original compositions. Their goal is to promote music education and provide opportunities for young musicians to perform.

The band members met while attending the same high school and formed Tentative Rumors as a way to express their love for music and connect with like-minded individuals.

Tentative Rumors performs at various events, including schools, community centers, and private parties. They have also performed at local festivals and have been invited to perform at a few national festivals.

The band members are all passionate about music and dedicated to promoting it in their community. They believe that music has the power to bring people together and to inspire change.

Tentative Rumors is a testament to the power of music and its ability to transcend boundaries. They are a shining example of how music can bring people together and create a sense of community.
Sophomore Emma Petersen hopes to lead the Dukes back to the CAA championship. While the Dukes return some key losses from last season, Klaes-Bawcombe notes that the team is largely different from last year’s squad. Although the Dukes struggled in nonconference games, finishing 4-7 in their 11 nonconference contests, Klaes-Bawcombe describes a certain advantage for an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament—like last season.

"This team is such a new team that we’re really only looking forward to goal, attacking and feeding," Klaes-Bawcombe said. "I think that the biggest thing on attack will be sharing the ball and working within the system, Klaes-Bawcombe hopes to utilize the team’s athletic ability and overall ability on the field.

"We’re a bit of a closer team," Klaes-Bawcombe said. "We’re not going to be ready for what comes at them in season. "

"I’m excited to see how the girls use this opportunity to get to know each other," Klaes-Bawcombe said. "That’s one of the benefits of playing in nonconference games. They spend a lot of time together, and that’s one of the factors that go into a successful team."

"I think we’re a better team than we were last year," Bryce said. "I think we’re better as a team this year."

"I think that we’re better than we were last year," Bryce said. "I think that we’re really working on our defense and our offense."

"I think that the biggest thing on attack will be sharing the ball and working within the system," Klaes-Bawcombe said. "We’re doing a lot of things differently this year, and we’re really focusing on having an impact on the game from the start."

Super Bowl LI is surely worth the wait. The New England Patriots and the Atlanta Falcons will face off Thursday night at NRG Stadium in Houston, Texas. It will be a clash of two teams ranked as the top in the NFL. The Falcons, on the other hand, are headed to their second Super Bowl in three years, having won Super Bowl LI in 2016.

The Falcons’ offense will feature quarterback Matt Ryan, who has been dominant throughout the regular season. Ryan has been named the NFL’s Most Valuable Player (MVP) for the second consecutive year. He threw for 4,944 yards and 32 touchdowns, while also completing 67.1% of his passes. The Falcons have a balanced attack with running back Devonta Freeman, who had 1,219 rushing yards and 11 touchdowns. Wide receiver Julio Jones, who has 1,492 receiving yards and 10 touchdowns, will also be a key part of the offense.

The Patriots, on the other hand, have a defense that has been dominant throughout the season. They have allowed only 147 points in 16 games, including playoffs. The Patriots’ defense is led by star quarterback Tom Brady, who has thrown for 4,341 yards and 29 touchdowns. The Patriots’ defense has been a key factor in their success, allowing only 17.9 points per game.

The Patriots have a balanced offense as well, with running back LeGarrette Blount, who has 1,183 rushing yards and 17 touchdowns, and wide receiver Julian Edelman, who leads the team with 71 receptions for 1,118 yards. The Patriots have a strong defense, led by linebacker Dont’a Hightower, who has 8.5 sacks and 1 interception.

With both teams having strong offenses and defenses, this game promises to be a close one. The Patriots have the edge in experience, having been to the Super Bowl five times in the last decade. The Falcons have been to the Super Bowl once before, in 2016. The Patriots have a 3-1 record against the Falcons in the regular season.

Overall, the Patriots have the edge in this matchup. They have the better defense and a more balanced offense. The Falcons will need to have a solid performance on both sides of the ball to have a chance at winning.
