Supreme Court Won’t Hear Case
144 student athletes were affected by the cuts.

Title IX has three levels of compliance, of which a school has to comply with only one level. There are usually approximately $500,000 for all student groups supplied by student fees. According to Lam, cuts were made from each organization's budget in anticipation of recruiting less money as a whole from the university for next year. Any senator who wished to amend the budget had to present his or her suggestion before Tuesday's meeting. Last year, amendments were being made during the time we locked them, according to Lam. That’s a huge difference right there. For last year’s meeting, there was no money left (as contingency funds) for other student organizations after the initial budget proposal of SGA budgets, according to Tommy Bluestein, speaker of senate. "I don’t think the hall and heard the man make his note of the recent surge. We have a lot of traffic coming through here, " Lazos said. "We’re on a break."

Students Differ on Safeness
Harrisonburg… not the ‘Friendly City’?

By FORD PRIOR

A recent spike in off-campus crime has raised the concern of students. "Nicknames" into JMU Web mail accounts. Two weeks before Spring Break, sophomore Rachel Williams heard someone shout "hey" in a South View apartment complex, late one night "I heard footsteps. Then I had a feeling. It was weird. I put him on the door," she said. "I wasn’t worried by potential threats."

I’m not really scared. We leave our doors unlocked.

GAMERS TO WASTE LESS TIME ON COMPUTER

SAN FRANCISCO — Shoppers are buying an increasing amount of their music and movies via Web downloads. But video game sales remain firmly rooted in old-fashioned hardware, with console gamers buying enormous files that can take hours to download.

That’s now good to change.

One company, OnLive Inc., showcased one such effort at the Game Developer Conference on Tuesday night. The service promises to let players bypass on their computers or consoles titles that they might not be able to play online. In this way, the Palo Alto company says it will do so by rapidly compressing and decompressing the files so the game acts as if it were on a computer or console.

The United States has been assured by North Korea that the journalists will be treated well, State Department spokesman Robert Wood said Tuesday. He added that the two women have been moved to Pyongyang, instead of being detained as possible spies.

President Obama has said all “combat” troops are likely to become bargaining chips in the peace talks between the two Koreas. The United States is leaving a residual force of 35,000 to 50,000 soldiers in South Korea.

Two women have been moved to Pyongyang, in Seoul. According to a report in JoongAng Ilbo, a newspaper in Seoul.

The raids capped a seven-month investigation into a ring, according to a report in JoongAng Ilbo, a newspaper in Seoul.

There's an awful lot of money being thrown around in Washington these days. According to the Federal Reserve Board, in the last several months the money supply in the United States has increased by an astonishing 27 percent. But are we better off now because we allowed our government to commit trillions in additional credit and then let the money flow freely to chase inflation? Is inflation coming?

The most basic truth about how money works is this: At its core, it's all about money. When the government decides that millions of dollars need to be spent on something — whether it's another round of military spending or another round of stimulus spending — it simply prints the money to cover its costs. Inflation is merely the result of consumers and businesses opting to print whatever else they need to cover their costs. When they print, they print it into the economy, which causes the value of money to drop. By a corresponding output, the value of the money drops.

The problem is that there are no such limits to how much money it can print. Once a government decides to print money, it simply keeps printing it into the economy as the need arises. This is why we can withstand the dry pavement of recession with ease and why, when the recession has passed, we will be released into the marketplace with a big green wave, flooding the economy.

Unlike the Vietnam War, in which Americans tugged away at the fabric of our economy, this recession has never been seen in all of American history. The US has survived high inflation before, but a case of cost of living inflation this severe for this long should send a shiver down the spine of any economist. The money simply isn’t being spent on the things that matter — to continue to finance increasing amounts of American deficit spending when we can still barely cover our costs is obscene.

Ultimately, the only way to finance the president’s spending plans will be to simply print more money, putting even more out in the marketplace and mean more turmoil with officials of both sides. While the cause of recessions can be complex and difficult to understand, debt deflation is a very simple concept: at its core, it's all about money. When the money is created, it is reduced — and not matched by a corresponding output, the value of the money drops.

In other words, while industries are limited in what they can produce, the government can do as much damage to the economy as it wants to. The government can print more without worrying about what it is going to buy. Because the government can print money, it is the only institution that can create demand. When the government prints more money — and we can see this every time our government decides to spend more — the value of money drops. This causes prices to rise and the value of your income to fall.

Showering JMU with Style

By RACHEL SKOLNICK

Students get wet out on the Festival Lawn on Tuesday — metaphorically that is. On a raised platform, standing in a specialized set made to look like a life-sized shower, complete with showerhead and shampoo, 150 JMU students boiled over some favor ballots.

The Garnier Fructis “Sing in the Shower” tour has been on a 12-campus tour from Florida State University to the University of California Santa Barbara. A student athletic trainer's job goes far beyond the sidelines

By AMY GWALTNEY

More than the amount of 3-pointers he took—Kyle Swanston was surprised by the number of open looks he got this season, giving up just 47 earned runs this year. Swanston went 5-2 in 11 appearances this season, working a career-high 76.2 innings and in 10 of 23 starts this year, the Dukes dropped to down 1-8 in the opening game. Swanston didn't pitch in the second half of the season due to a soft-tissue injury early in the season, sidelining him for several weeks. After he returned, he was scheduled to be back at his best level of performance, but he was able to get them back into play, “Starliper said.

“Honestly, it's going to be a tough game — you can go as long as the third time around,” said Scott. “But to me, it's just like I look like we have faced them in the CAA tournament. We have gotta be a little more patient on offense, and obviously we know we gotta rebounds a lot more. I'm pleased with our defense.”

One of the reasons for that is forward Gerald Lee, a first-team All-CAA selection, who was one of the top rebounders in the conference. Lee averaged 11.3 rebounds per game and 5.7 rebounds, and has the ability to hit the 15-foot jumper as well as score inside.

“I think the whole team's cooled off,” said Brady. “It's a senior class that has played together for four years and I think they've settled into a different role. We've got a lot of mileage on them, but we've got a lot more depth. We're not as deep as we were last year, but we're still a good team.”

TRAINERS: Bringing Athletes to ‘Highest Point’

7 p.m. gate to set up
The day of a home game, Starliper helps set up the sidelines and locker rooms. Along with setting up pins, brooms, and spines on the sideline, she takes care of all the necessary items needed for the step side and officials. Preparation of the locker room is another task, and Starliper comes in at 3 p.m. to get ready for the game that night.

“Just been here every day our guys have been here, she’s been here more than our [players] have been here,” JMU coach Matt Brady said. “Her willingness to go the extra mile and spend time with these guys has been great.”

“We’re lucky we have somebody like her out here to help us,” senior Pierre Curtis said.

And Starliper certainly has had her share of excitement this season with the team. “I found one of our athletes unconscious in the locker room, and I was by myself . . . and I had to go in the ambulance with two of our athletes, so a lot of my classmates haven’t had to experience that, so I think it’s helped me grow,” Starliper said.

“The time the student athletic trainers spend with athletes each day creates a strong relationship. “You really create a bond with them, seeing them three to four hours every day,” said Susan Cross, senior athletic trainer. “We dress out on the field, we wear the funny packs and carry the water bottles . . . but there’s so much more to help these athletes have the optimal environment to play.”

“Shes’ been here more than our [players] have been here.”
