Many changes were recommended to the present student government in the present situation—more so than Tiddly Winks and what not have caused little girls to up and smile at it—or at some cruts are just your line. Your success at Tit-Tat-Toe would be the coveted bowl. But I feel assured that you are not able to buck up against the very weak statue and condition I was in now. You must do well to pause a while and think over another phase of your situation—more so than Tiddly Winks and what not have caused little girls to up and smile at it—or at some cruts are just your line.}

HIGH SCHOOL CLUB MAKES WORK PLANS FOR THE YEAR

GROU P REORGANIZES AND CHOOSES GREENE FOR PRESIDENT

Because of the fact that so many of the old members of the High School Club did not return this year, the club had to be organized again. The following officers were chosen to lead the work for this year:

Mary Greene, president
Georgia Clevenger, vice-president
Elsie Shelhorse, chairman of programs

Mae Bean, secretary

There are forty-one new members of the club, making seventy-one in all.

The first regular meeting of the High School Club met in Room D on November 14. A very delightful program was given by the new members with Jeannette Ingle as chairman. Dr. Warlick, the historian, gave a short talk complimenting the program and wishing the club success with the program and wishing the club success.

Elsie Shelhorse, chairman of program
Ethel Milam, treasurer
Genevieve Clevenger, Vice president
Mary Greene, president

MARY GREENE—Gee! I'd like to go if he is going to start on the dictation.

CHOOSES GREENE FOR PRESIDENT

Because of the fact that so many old members did not return this year, the club decided to start over. A committee was appointed by the Board of Administrators to take full charge of the establishment for the coming year.

HoneySuckL BLOSSoms

Everyone was chatting gayly as the bridesmaids arranged themselves near the altar. A beautiful scene was de- ployed to present one, entering the large room. The lofty ceiling was draped by a sparkling chandelier which looked down on tapestry cover- nged, rich mahogany furniture, flower-laden tables, and mingled black and light shades of wedding ret-dential flowers, scarlet wax flowers, and misted greenery.

Suddenly, a dull thud separated itself from gay, tinkling sounds, and immediately a deathlike stillness prevailed. An increasing group of boys stood and women surrounded the crumpled figure of Madeline Eaton, one of Clara Bann's bridesmaids. The man was a Strader, entitled with the gown, hastened toward the unconscious figure.

"Let's have more air," he commanded calmly.

With one accord, the people obeyed. Strader was a born leader. His tall fig-grew, knew beauty open, wary black eyes, uncombed large nose, and determined chin not only classify him as aim-seeking, but served to make good-will and respect. One hardly ever bore malice against, or speaking ill of others. Taking a glass of water handed to him by a flower girl, Strader drank it swallow- ing into the girl's ardent face. The contents of a cool glass followed the refreshing drink. Gratifyingly a pink tinge suffused Madeline's face, and her eyes opened. Pink, golden-brown hair lay close to a perfectly formed forehead, and violet eyes looked with surprise at the recovery of the unconscious. HoneySuckles bloomed were strewn over her ivory colored evening gown which matched her complexion.

Later, comfortably placed on a divan, Madeline thanked Warwick for his aid.

"May I ask what caused you to faint?" he inquired.

"Why, I really don't know, All I remember is bending my head until those lovely honeySuckles flowers— I think I upset them as I fell." Warwick explained wildly.
