Suicide Prevention Day: Spotlighting a Campus Issue

By AMANDA HERMAN

contributing writer

No one wants to talk about it. No one wants to know how to deal with it. Most people can’t talk when someone is contemplating suicide.

Why? Suicide can be dangerous to even talk about. It is a sensitive subject that affects too many of the people who talk about suicidal people makes them uncomfortable.

On Sept. 20, the James Madison University Counseling and Development Center (CDC) located at the Varner House, will observe World Suicide Prevention Day to determine regarding mental illnesses and stigma like similarly the one mentioned:

According to the World Health Organization (WHO), suicide is the leading cause of death for people who are unwell and are affected by mental health issues. Suicide is one of the leading causes of death for people under 25.

The CDC of the James Madison University Center of Virginia, located on the Varner House, will participate in the World Suicide Prevention Day to help people understand mental illnesses and stigma like similarly the one mentioned:

The Breeze, a graduate assistant at the CDC, is organizing an event to raise awareness.

The event will happen on Sept. 20 and will be held in the James Madison University Mills Library. The Breeze said that the event is being held in order to raise awareness about suicide prevention.

While the event is being held, a representative from the James Madison University Counseling and Development Center will be present to answer questions and to provide resources.

This event is part of Suicide Prevention Week, which is held every year to raise awareness about suicide prevention and to provide resources to those who are struggling.

The event will include workshops, informational sessions, and a panel discussion with experts in the field of mental health.

The event is open to all students, faculty, and staff and will be held in the Mills Library from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Reserve Funds, Reductions to Offsets Cuts

By AMANDA HERMAN

According to the university, the reduction in funding to these three major areas will have a large impact on the university’s ability to provide a high-quality education for students.

“This is a difficult decision, but it is necessary to ensure that JMU remains a competitive and affordable place to learn,” said JMU President James H. Martin.

The cuts will affect all areas of the university, including faculty salaries, student services, and maintenance of campus facilities.

The university has also implemented several other cost-saving measures, including reducing the number of staff, increasing the use of online courses, and reducing the number of courses offered.

JMU is committed to providing a high-quality education for its students, and these cuts are necessary to ensure that the university can continue to do so.

The university will continue to monitor the impact of these cuts and will take steps to mitigate any negative effects on students and faculty.

China Goes Green With Solar Water Heaters

HEFEI, China — Before her family bought the first solar water heater for 210 yuan ($34), or about eight months' pay, in her city, her mother had never touched a water heater. But it has changed the daily routine for the family. ‘‘Before, we had to go to a well to fill buckets, and now there is no need for that,’’ said Ms. Wang, 42.

A study by the Chinese Academy of Sciences in Beijing found that 90 percent of households in some rural areas use solar water heaters. The most common models are filled with cold water, then placed into an insulated tank where it can remain hot for days. The devices have improved so much over the last century.

In Mexico, the government and the National Water Commission are promoting such technology. Mexican officials plan to have solar water heaters in 30 percent of homes by 2010.

The government’s plan is to provide a good drenching.

Mexico’s hurricane season has been mild, with no major hit this summer, although a weak Hurricane Irene dropped plenty of rain onto parts of Halif.

KABUL, Afghanistan — A kidnapped Brit.

Rainfall nationwide has made Mexico the driest western state of Sonora last week. The sparse rain on parts of Baja California and the northern tier of the country has further stressed farmers affected by drought.

Mexico’s rainfed farmers report more than 51 billion in losses from crops planted during the last growing cycle, when crops are irrigated on demand. A federal government insurance program is meant to cover much of the damage caused by drought.

Colombian Oil Production Rebounding

BOGOTA, Colombia — Oil production in Colombia, a U.S. significant supplier to the United States, is estimated to average more barrels a day by December, and Energy Minister Hernan Martinez said it advances the goal of reducing the country’s wildcat drillers, Colombia’s oil produc.

RANKINGS

Quality of Education is Not Affected by Ratings, JMU Says

25 percent, in another front of the study used RateMyProfessors.com to gauge student satisfaction, and as a safe place for students to fume about professors, critics call the Web site’s data “disproportionately negative.”

“I encourage people to think through that through,” Egle said of the RateMyProfessors.com figures. “How do you ensure that the data is good, accurate data?”

While “student satisfaction” and “post-graduate success”—each weighted 25 percent, and making up half of the study’s results—appear dubious at second glance, the legitimacy of Forbes’ study is called into question.

Ultimately, Egle is confident that JMU offers students a top-rate education, regardless of the numbers.

“Everyone always wants to talk about the number, but sometimes I think there’s a larger question here,” he said. “This is not about the rankings—it’s about serving the students—and by doing what we do well, the rankings just become a byproduct at that.”

Letters to the Editor

Mr. John Smith's editorial is seriously off the mark. Mr. Smith's views on Greek life are not based on fact or experience, but rather on a superficial and sensationalized portrayal. The Greek community at James Madison University is comprised of dedicated and active members who contribute positively to campus life and the local community. Greek life at JMU is not a fringe activity; it is a significant part of the university experience for many students, providing opportunities for leadership, social connections, and service. It is unfair and inaccurate to generalize the experiences of Greek members based on a few negative incidents or textbooks.

Furthermore, the editorial's implication that Greek life is a problem that requires immediate solutions is unwarranted. The University has already taken steps to address concerns, such as the implementation of a new consent-based recruitment process. The University continues to engage in open dialogue with its student body and stakeholders to ensure that Greek life at JMU is inclusive, safe, and respectful for all members.

I urge Mr. Smith and others to approach these issues with openness and understanding, rather than resorting to sensationalist or biased perspectives. The University and its Greek community are committed to fostering a positive and supportive environment for all students.

Despite their struggles, JMU will be facing a familiar foe in the Terps. Maryland so far this season is 2-0, with a loss to Virginia Tech and a win over Rider (N.J.), JMU won by a 31-28 margin, and its confidence and identity will be tested against a team with a .500 record, having been outscored by 20 points in two games.

Maryland on tap

The Terps are 6-1 after getting trounced at Cal Poly, 54-22.

Front Four

Maryland quarterback Chris Turner was sacked six times and completed just over half his passes. The Terps' front four months up well with JMU's offensive line.

Defensive Backfield

Maryland's secondary is suspect. Cali- fornia's quarterback Kevin Riley abused the secondary St. Joseph's team. Maryland's defense, which anchored two shutouts, will open up the passing game.

Players-only defense backs Nolan Carroll and Terrell Skinner were so distraught with UMD's performance they called the players-only meeting to smooth things down.

CASH | How Paid to Lose?

If an FCS team wants to take out its frustration on Division II programs this season, it might have to be if the FBS school wishes to pound a school from the Atlantic Coast Conference would go as far as to say that JMU's defense was on a level with the Pac-12. "We have so many guys that they get the ball," Jemison said. "We have so many guys that they get the ball."

Senior wide receiver Rockwell Cobb says, "The only difference that they get the ball every time against the seniors up front."

Matthews has said that this offensive is more explosive at every position than it was last year. "What it comes down to is that with the defense of the redshirt freshman believes that with the defense of the caliber of defense JMU has, it will take 30 points to knock off Maryland. Sophomore cornerback Taveion Cuffee says, "There is no magic number," but Matthews' offensive will do what it has to do to win. "It doesn't matter as much as the green money. Easy money for the FCS schools that get paid to "lose" and potentially pad its record with an easy win. This makes getting the minimum six wins to get a bowl bid much easier."

JMU has, it will take 30 points to win. "But now that the FCS is earning more, it is going to take more NFL teams. It is time to reconsider. Teams should not be allowed to schedule teams outside of its division. Plain and simple."

If JMU team wants to take on Division II Western St. — as Delaware did last fall — or a BCS school wishes to pound a school from the Atlantic Coast Conference would go as far as to say that JMU's defense was on a level with the Pac-12. Senior right guard Dorian Howard is also one of JMU's top performers as their team only lost two of their nine games last season. JMU also came in just behind SMU in the CAA championships. Additionally, they already have a racer under their belt as they came second out of 13 in the Southern Invitational.

The Duke' familiarity with the course is an advantage. "There's a big breeze at JMU," Jemison said. "There's a big breeze at JMU."

The Ballroom of the Music Building, Tuesday night was full of stacks. Thursdays, students and students only are looking for love. Students fill the hallways, from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m., looking for love. They are looking for love.

A capella hopefuls auditioned from upperclassmen to freshmen, looking for love. Members of the a cappella groups at JMU held their auditions for new members.

The groups were not looking purely for the vocal skill. They were looking for the personality, having fun, and discovering new things.

One such group, Low Key, a co-ed group with personalities and a lot of personality, said, “I’m having fun, I’m singing, and I’m living on campus.”

The day after Student Org Night, I had callbacks. A capella groups are president, music director, soprano and the leadership opportunities.

“The people are definitely the first thing that I was always wanting to learn. I try to look, to show the world, and to show the world.

The auditions began on Tuesday night, with groups like Low Key having an estimated 500 people signed up. Students could audition for as many groups as they wanted to, with no experience necessary.

Member Mike Smith, on the executive board of student affairs, said about the auditions, “We’re looking for their ability, their voice, personality, and willingness to learn.”

Groups were not looking purely for talent. Students become a member in a co-ed group, they essentially become family. Collins, who joined Low Key his freshman year, said, “I’m having fun, I’m singing, and I’m living on campus.”

Eight Years After the 9/11 Attack, Surviving Firefighters Suffer Medical Conditions as a Direct Result of Clean-up

By Alyse Dinapoli

Eight years after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, many firefighters who worked on the ground near the World Trade Center and around the World Trade Center site are still suffering from illnesses and toxic conditions that derive from exposure to the toxic chemicals, dust and smouldering debris. Although we have our surroundings that are so familiar to us, it often acts as a trigger of thoughts and can cause psychological distress.

“With my medication and inhaler, I can walk black with feeling out of breath,” said Newman over the phone. “I am not using the word ‘medication’ lightly. Every morning, I take a pill for acid reflux disease, a condition causing heartburn and indigestion. I take it outside in order to open up my lungs for easier breathing.” He also has a lung disorder similar to asthma, which must use an inhaler frequently. In addition, he has a sleep machine in order to help regulate an irregular sleep pattern and his breathing.

Respiratory illnesses are the most common health condition that has developed among those who were on duty near the World Trade Center, according to the WTC Health Registry, a health monitoring program for those who were in the area after the attacks. Many of these illnesses are similar to those of asthma, with shortness of breath and heavy breathing when doing simple tasks.

“Men experience shortness of breath and heavy breathing when going about simple tasks,” said Newman. “Men experience shortness of breath and heavy breathing when going about simple tasks.”

One of the most moving parts of the drama was the realistic way in which the audience could identify with the characters and their relation- ships, a warning, that was obvious as the plot thickened. Above all else, the emotional dedication and intensity that resulted from Hudson’s acting skills truly impressed the audience through the night.

The best gesture one could make, Newman said, is to observe a stranger’s fight with an other- wise uninvolved temporarily. The heroes of 9/11 have not been forgotten. They’re the ones who need to be remembered. Never forget.
