March 2008

United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs

CISR JOURNAL

Follow this and additional works at: https://commons.lib.jmu.edu/cisr-journal

Part of the Defense and Security Studies Commons, Emergency and Disaster Management Commons, Other Public Affairs, Public Policy and Public Administration Commons, and the Peace and Conflict Studies Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://commons.lib.jmu.edu/cisr-journal/vol12/iss2/39

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Center for International Stabilization and Recovery at JMU Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of Conventional Weapons Destruction by an authorized editor of JMU Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact dc_admin@jmu.edu.
Gender and Disarmament

For the last decade, the UNODA has been committed to the incorporation of gender dimensions into its work. A 1997 letter to all heads of departments by the U.N. Secretary-General stated that the process of gender mainstreaming is “the responsibility of us all and not just gender experts or isolated units,” and called specifically for reports on gender dimensions in all respective areas of work, along with policy recommendations and concrete strategies for gender mainstreaming. Following this directive and a series of other mandates set forth by the United Nations, UNODA published Briefing Notes on Gender Perspectives on Disarmament in 2001, which was followed by a gender mainstreaming action plan two years later.

Briefing Notes on Gender Perspectives on Disarmament, published in collaboration with the Office of the Special Advisor of Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women, assess the relevance of gender dimensions in disarmament issues and identifies strategic implications for promoting gender equality and disarmament. In a speech on 14 March 2001, then Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs Dr. Harper stated that the implementation of the Action Plan had been met with initial success, and that evidence of the UNODA's gender mainstreaming efforts was apparent in its activities worldwide.

In 2005, the U.N. Office for Disarmament Affairs released its Gender Mainstreaming Action Plan, which synthesized the research compiled for the Briefing Notes with strategies for effective implementation of gender mainstreaming in the field. The Action Plan’s purpose was “to facilitate progress on disarmament through the integration of gender insights into disarmaments debates, decision-making and actions, and through more equitable participation by women in decision-making.” It also identified four sub-goals:

1. To examine the linkages between gender equality and disarmament promotion;
2. To enhance departmental capacity to incorporate gender perspectives into its work;
3. To advocate the importance of gender perspectives on disarmament, and;
4. To reach out to gender equality actors, women’s organizations and others to engage in the continuing dialogue on disarmament issues.

Former Under-Secretary-General Nobuo Kato reflected in the department’s accomplishments during the “International Women, Weapons of Mass Destruction and Preventing War,” noting that the implementation of the Action Plan had been met with initial success, and that evidence of the UNODA’s gender mainstreaming efforts was apparent in its activities worldwide.

International Women’s Day Disarmament Seminar. In March 2008, UNODA–Geneva Director Tim Caughley spoke on behalf of UNODA during the International Women’s Day Disarmament Seminar. At what cost? Resolution 1325, Women, Weapons & Conflict.” The annual conference, organized by the Women’s International League for Peace and Freedom, highlights the issues of women’s empowerment and gender equality through weapons reduction, peace and sustainable development. The focus of the 2008 seminar was the U.N. Security Council Resolution 1325 on women, peace and security—the first of its kind to specifically examine the impact of armed conflict on women and, in turn, women’s efforts toward conflict resolution.

In his opening remarks, Caughley reaffirmed the commitment of the UNODA to advancing gender equality, saying that, although there has been significant progress in recent years, “more needs to be done to fully integrate women and gender perspectives into all aspects of security and disarmament work around the globe.”

Conclusion

The U.N. Office for Disarmament Affairs’ commitment to the promotion of the mutual interests of gender equality and disarmament is evident in its weapons-reduction initiatives, from small arms and light weapons to weapons of mass destruction. Briefing Notes on Gender Perspectives and Gender Mainstreaming Action Plan provide a preliminary framework from which parties with a vested interest in peace can benefit.

See Endnotes, page 113

Zach Wall has been with The Journal of ERW and Mine Action as an Editorial Assistant since September 2007. He is pursuing a Bachelor of Arts in Sociology at James Madison University.

Research and Development Sponsored by JMU Scholarly Commons, 2008.

By: Zach Wall | Mine Action Information Center |