PRIVATE SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION IN VIRGINIA

Construction began last fall on the new Madeira School plant at Greenway, Fairfax County, a few miles from Washington, and the school will open in its new country location next fall. The plans of Waldron Faulkner, architect, call for a group of ten buildings of Colonial design. The estate consists of 210 acres and has more than half a mile frontage on the Potomac. About $675,000 is to be spent on the development.

Stuart Hall, Staunton, has a new building under construction which it is expected to open this year.

Stuyvesant School, Warrenton, is having plans drawn by Smith and May, Baltimore architects, for buildings to supplement its present plant so that the school can eventually accommodate one hundred boys. It will probably take $500,000 to carry out the school's plans which include new dormitories, an academic building, chapel, library, dining hall, and gymnasium.

Warrenton Country School for girls last year built a teachers' residence, remodeled the gymnasium and added five classrooms to it, and installed a central heating plant. Luther Warner of Richmond is the school's architect. Bradford Williams, landscape architect of Boston, is now directing work on the grounds.

Woodberry Forest School last fall completed a new $45,000 classroom building, Anderson Hall, and dedicated Hanes Field, the new athletic field with the William J. Hanes Memorial Fountain and Field House of which the total cost was $32,000.

Early in 1930, Hargrave Military Academy, Chatham, opened a new fireproof dormitory with a capacity of fifty boys.

The Massanutten Academy, Woodstock, plans to erect a new building shortly.

AN ESSAY ON CHERUBS

The picture was a detail of the famous Sistine Madonna, The Cherubs. The composition was Maudie's. Maudie was in the third grade.

"Cherubs are two little things hanging on to nothing with their arms. The cherub's eye is black and their wings is black and they haven't any clothes on. But that don't make no difference because the part of them that wears clothes isn't there."
