BEST AND CHEAPEST SANITARY DRINK DISPENSERS

"Studies have proved that germs may be transmitted from the lips or tongue of an infected person who places them in contact with the spout of a drinking fountain, which may readily happen where the water bubbles straight up and only a short distance." So advises the Ohio State Department of Health in an official bulletin dated November 1, 1934.

"These studies also have shown that in fountains whose water bubbles up vertically the germs sometimes are held in suspension and are kept dancing in the column of water for several hours before passing off as waste. It also has been demonstrated that certain selected varieties of germs can be placed in the spout by contact of lips that may be smeared with them, and recovered several hours later from the bubbling column of water. Therefore, all drinking fountains should be designed to discharge the water at an angle, and the orifice should be so located that under no circumstances will it be brought into contact with the drinker's lips.

"Where drinking water is supplied in public places, not delivered under pressure, or if under pressure but with no fountain provided, the common drinking cup is quite frequently found, and is used by many persons regardless of warnings given and the regulations prohibiting its use.

"The best and cheapest policy for the owner of the latter-mentioned types of water supplies to pursue is to provide individual paper cups, if he desires to supply the public with satisfactory means of obtaining the water. This method would be safer for the user, and there would be no violation of the Sanitary Code."

TRAGIC

"I understand," said a young woman to another, "that at your church you are having such small congregations. Is that so?"

"Yes," answered the other girl, "so small that every time the rector says, 'Dearly loved,' you feel as if you had received a proposal."—Lorain (Ohio) Journal.

AS A MATTER OF FACT, NO
