Congress will return to work Monday with only four days left to pass a budget before a government shutdown looms on March 1. Most of the department’s employees would be deemed “essential" and would continue to work without paychecks, and those who refuse to accept the furlough will be fired. However, the president has the authority to declare a national emergency in the event of a government shutdown. Washington Post

The Republican-controlled Congress has yet to pass a budget for fiscal year 2014, leaving the government operate under a continuing resolution that expires March 1. The next session of Congress begins on Tuesday and is expected to hear from several members of the Senate and House about their plans to pass a budget for the first quarter of the fiscal year. The Senate is expected to meet on Tuesday to consider the bill, which would provide funding through March 1. The House will consider the measure on Wednesday. President Barack Obama has proposed a budget of $3.7 trillion for fiscal year 2015, with $996 billion in new revenues. It includes cuts in discretionary spending, investments in infrastructure and education, and an end to “Lipstick exemptions" for tax breaks that benefit corporations. The Senate has passed a budget proposal that would increase spending by $92 billion and cut taxes by $65 billion. The House has approved a budget that would increase spending by $86 billion and cut taxes by $70 billion. The Senate is expected to pass the House version of the budget on Thursday.

Improvements expected to be made to I-81 interchange

The Harrisonburg-Rockingham Metropolitan Planning Organization (HRMPO) is hosting a public information meeting to evaluate road improvements. The meeting will take place on Thursday, March 5 from 5 to 7 p.m., at the Lady V Sabine Educational Center. The City of Harrisonburg, Rockingham County and JMU have teamed up with the Virginia Department of Transportation to evaluate how the I-81 interchange can be improved.

Tom Hartmann, project manager for the Virginia Department of Transportation, said that the I-81 interchange is one of many that need to be improved and that provide feedback at the meeting, on the other hand, the public are accepted at the meeting, or they can submit written comments to the Program Manager Kevin McDermott at 12 MacTanly Place Staunton, Virginia, 24401 or kevin@cspdc.org by 5 p.m. on March 4.

The interchange Alternatives Analysis Study can be reviewed at hrvampo.org under plans and projects.

JMU needs on-campus voting location

The proposal for an on-campus precinct is a tangible, achievable plan to do just that. As former President Nixon stated in his annual address, “The American electorate must be protected in every conceivable way.” The Washington Post notes that only 23 percent of 18- to 29-year olds voted during the 2012 presidential elections. Turnout grew more during the 2012 presidential election with a 15 percent increase in voter turnout. The proposal for an on-campus precinct is a tangible, achievable plan to do just that. The Campus Vote Project says that college campuses offer an opportunity for students to practice their civic duty.

We as future citizens need to get politically active. Harrisonburg’s City Council is considering the plan to add a polling location on campus. However, the plan is not without its flaws. The plan took many years to implement and the students and the administration as being the final decision. We believe that an on-campus voting location is not only a response to last Thursday’s front-page story on the subject, but a step forward in increasing voter turnout rates. Campus residents should have the opportunity to be more active Harrisonburg citizens and give them the ability to vote with convenience will encourage that. "I go sledding on a hill outside of The Village during the snow day on Tuesday, Feb. 17."

Rebecca Mendelsohn (left), a freshman hospitality major and Riya Patel, a freshman biology major, and technical communication major, said. "You is the best.

Most veterans seem to agree that the ISAT hill also popular sledding locations on campus, but for sleds while they were there.

"I had a broken neck from when I was a kid, so the first time I actually tried this was last weekend," Patel said. "I had heard good things about things, so we decided to come here."

"We didn’t realize he would do it so soon," she said. "It’s great that they’re so accommodating. And it’s very interesting to be able to watch the process. It makes you want to come back."

The museum opened its new locations to the public on Thursday. The space is not only a vintage jewelry museum, but offers customers a view of the jewelry-making workshop.

"This is a life-long skill to learn," Kohl said. "I have techniques for the production of the museum’s jewelry."

"I was around the veteran’s table, and people in Stone Gate but it was cool because the veterans were on campus as well as on.

"We went sledding with a bunch of random people in Stone Gate but it was cool because you’re doing something fun so it doesn’t really matter who you’re with," Bartell said as she chuckled at some sledgers falling into the snow nearby.

By evening, Saturday’s snow was too deep and powdery for them to make it down the hill. Although she could climb back up the stairs instead of trying to climb back up the hill, which is easily the worst part about sledding

"I personally go sledding off campus," Figueroa said. "There’s this huge hill right over to University Park by the ropes course.

"I go to the ropes course. It’s full of hot girls at night."

While sledding can be dangerous, being aware of the surrounding areas can help to minimize the risk and exponentially the activity.

Club wrestling team prepares for conference tournament on Saturday

By FORREST DEAL

The Dukes' next contest is this Friday when they face off at Target Center and fans will once again be able to witness the club team in action and support the next generation of wrestlers. The team is nearing the end of its season with its sights set on the conference meet this Saturday. The meet will be held at the Convocation Center.

Jenner Steves' CT scan taken on day after game due to injury of Robert Williams at Target Center and fans will once again be able to see the club team in action.

According to ticket website Ticketmaster and an article published by Parthen, ticket prices are $10 per ticket. But after last week's loss, the team is looking for ticket sales to increase to help cover the cost of travel to the conference meet.
